Miss Duncan Bride of Frank Lalor

A pretty wedding took place at the Ridgeview hotel in Evanston Thursday, evening, Feb. 23, when Miss Bessie Hill Duncan of Evanston became the bride of Frank Lalor of Barrington.

The bride was beautifully gowned in white satin and wore a lace veil. She carried an arm bouquet of lilies of the valley and white roses. Her sister Miss Agnes Duncan, served as maid of honor and Arvid Anderson of Barrington attended as best man.

The bride was given away by her brother, Thomas Duncan.

Following the simple but impressive single ring service a banquet was served to the sixty guests. During the banquet the bridal couple received telegrams of congratulations from Mrs. Lalor's people in Scotland and from Mr. Lalor's parents and other relatives in London.

Mrs. A. Anderson and daughter Helen, Mrs. Evelyn Pautre, and Francis Dunlea of Barrington were among the guests at the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. William Sibley, who spend their summers at their home near Barrington, were also guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Lalor are spending some time at Battle Creek, Mich., before coming to Barrington township where they will make their home.

Barrington Woman's Club

The problem of our present economic upheaval and its demand for a sane solution made the review of Glenn Frank's "Thunder and Dawn" by Mrs. Kirk Smith especially pertinent at this time. With scholarly precision and completeness, Mrs. Smith presented a report of absorbing interest to the well-attended study class at their meeting last week.

Being one of the more recent books in this particular field, "Thunder and Dawn" is not optimistic. The facts are clearly presented by the author, president of the University of Wisconsin. "Its sole purpose is to consider the raw materials of social renewal that are today lying about us in confusion and challenge, waiting only for adequate leadership to bring them together and to touch them into life. It does not presume to predict what will happen. It attempts only to suggest what may happen." The author considers three ideas for the future: (1) the idea of a New Renaissance; (2) the idea of a New Reformation; and (3) the idea of a new Industrial Revolution.

After the World War, a disunity of the Western mind occurred together with the disillusioning of the machinery of war. Following the war, a literature of despair flooded the Western world. This literature was an outgrowth of six distinct fears: (1) the biological fear; (2) the psychological; (3) the political; (4) the economic; (5) the administrative; and (6) the moral fear. The great world problem will deal with the mastery of the Pacific. Japan is but the first of the long arm of Asia. The white races must breed themselves back to unity.

Contrasting with the literature of despair, there is a literature of hope, and a need for a new leadership—perhaps a single great leader—is apparent. Through social leadership the West can escape a new dark age.

The author presents the following concepts for a new renaissance: (1) the idea of cultural nationalism; (2) of an economic internationalism; (3) of a rationalized politics; (4) of a mass-conscious industrialism; (5) of a socialized religion; (6) of a well-bred race; and (7) the idea of a realistic pacifism.

Our Western education has educated men for scholars, not for men. We need less specialization and more definite education for social mastery.

The religious movement is considered in the idea of a new reformation. Jesus wiped out racial differences through love. Western science and industry need a spiritual leadership. Both love and knowledge are essential to the life of a complete individual and to the social order of civilization. Religious leadership might play a productive role in reducing the race tensions that harass the West. In its attitude toward war the church faces three possible decisions: (1) it can follow a policy of aloofness; (2) it can follow a policy of compromise; or (3) it can follow a policy of renunciation.

The evolution of the machine age has run faster and reached farther in the United States than in any other sector of the civilized world. The machine age is here to stay. In spite of Europe's objections, the West will go American. The machine, according
