Jimmie Baker of Chicago visited his mother the first of the week.

Miss Lela Catlow of Evanston is a guest of relatives here this week.

Charles Stewart of Chicago was a guest at Rev. Hardin's Thursday.

Charles Hutchinson of Barrington saw the foot ball game Thursday.

The various churches are arranging for their usual Christmas services.

Thomas Catlow and family of Evanston were Palatine visitors this week.

George Helm of Arlington Heights was in town on business Wednesday.

Miss Lou Daverman has been a guest of Miss Mame Williams for a few days.

Attorney B. Francis Julien of Chicago visited his brother, C. E. Julien, Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Catlow were guests of Hiram Scherding Thanksgiving Day.

Walter Eckert of Woodstock was a guest of Peter Hartlett and family over Sunday.

Mrs. Owen has rented her farm to a horseman, who will use the place for training purposes.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Smith went to Nunda Wednesday to eat turkey with the latter's parents.

Edith and Lidia Dymond of Englewood spent Thanksgiving Day with W. L. Hicks and family.

May, James and Guy Baker came out from Chicago to spend Thanksgiving with their parents.

Mrs. A. G. Smith and cousin, Miss Alice Wortman, of Sheridan, were Barrington visitors Tuesday.

I. O. Clay shook hands with old friends Thursday. He came from Cincinnati to eat turkey here.

A number of sidewalks have been moved the past week to conform to the line authenticated by the village.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sizer of Barrington have moved into Dr. Moffat's house. Clarence is tending to the doctor's horses.

The free lectures have all been first class so far, and those who have not been attending have missed some rare treats. Let the church be crowded to the doors next time.

John Williams watched the Palatine-Marquette game from the side lines Thursday. He now wears two crutches, but he expects to be able to go to work in a week.

Quite a number of young people attended a meeting in the Methodist church Monday night for the purpose of forming a literary society and much interest was manifested by those present. The prospects for a good society of this kind are bright.

Mrs. Bert Ralph of Washington state was a guest of Mrs. C. D. Taylor from Thursday to Monday. Mrs. Ralph was formerly Miss Gusta Glockson of this place. Her husband was telegraph operator here some years ago.

A big audience turned out to hear the lecture on "Our New Possessions" in the Methodist church Tuesday night by Rev. G. W. Jackman of Chicago. The lecture was a description of the Hawaiian Islands as seen by the lecturer by a visit there. His hearers learned a great deal in regard to this country. The lecture throughout was finely illustrated by means of stereopticon pictures of the best kind, which added greatly to the interest. A good collection was taken at the close of the lecture.

The fire men's dance at Batterman's ball Wednesday night was largely attended. The music did not cease until after 4 o'clock Thursday morning.

The village has made application for three telephone stations for the police and fire departments. One will be placed at the town hall, one at the pumping station and one at the stand pipe. The telephone company agreed to put these in when it secured the franchise into the village. M. Richmond will put in a telephone and C. H. Patten will change his telephone from the house to the bank.

A small crowd saw the high school boys win a somewhat easy victory from the Marquette foot ball team on Thanksgiving Day. The final score was 17 to 0, and it appears to be more like a walk-away than a real contest just before time was called in the last half. The first touch-down was made by Walter Lytle, who secured the ball on a fumble and ran about 20 yards to the goal line. Ernest Beutler kicked goal. Albert Mundhenk, who was in every play of the game, carried the ball over the line for the second touch-down. Beutler kicked a difficult goal, thus sustaining the reputation which his right leg has earned. The ball was frequently lost by both sides on fumbles and Palatine lost some ground on this account. The defense against Marquette was good; the latter being held for downs several times. On a criss-cross play the ball was passed from Mundhenk to Ray Smith. Ray carried it around the left end for a pretty game. With but one minute more time to play Beutler called for an end run. He took the ball himself and ran over half the field for a touch-down. After the game several of the visitors became slightly war-like, but the two teams cheered one another and the last game of the season ended with the best of feeling all around.

School Entertainment.

Although last Friday night was a disagreeable evening, the Methodist church was crowded to hear the entertainment by the jubilee school pupils. Nearly $47 was taken in at the door and the teachers are well satisfied with the results. The audience witnessed and heard one of the best entertainments given in Palatine for a long time and all were well pleased with the manner in which they took their parts. The various exercises went through without a hitch and every number was good. Everything, from the pleasing acts of the little ones to the splendid glees of the High school pupils, was heartily applauded. The audience at times requested a repetition, but owing to the lengthy program, none of the parts were repeated. The instructors are to be commended for the excellent drill and showing made by all.

Public School Entertainment.

The entertainment for the benefit of the public school library occurred Friday evening of last week and was a complete success from every point of view. It is probably safe to say that the audience in attendance was the largest Barrington has ever seen at an entertainment where an admission fee has been charged. Yet, despite the crowded condition and that standing room was even hard to get, the audience was very orderly and attentive. This was undoubtedly due not only to the high character of the audience, but to the highly interesting program so gentlemanly and ably conducted by Mr. Meyer.

The "Trooping of the Colors" by about 125 school children was exceptionally well given, displaying not only Mr. Meyer's training ability, but also the high intelligence and remarkable discipline of the pupils participating. Barrington may well feel proud of her school children. They are second to none in the state. This feature of the entertainment was delightfully received by the entire audience and the displaying of the flags of all nations was very instructive, as well as entertaining. The stereopticon views given of Cuba, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands were well chosen and remarkably clear and distinct. The moving pictures were something new to many in the audience and, being very good, were immensely appreciated, especially by the children.

The school authorities, teachers, pupils and the public at large feel very grateful to the Zion church trustees, Messrs. Landwer, Gieske, Plagge, Listarke, Hobein, Frye and Wiseman, for their kindness in granting the use of the church and in this manner publicly express to them their sincere thanks.

The proceeds of the evening netted over $50.

Program of the Young Peoples' Missionary Society.

The regular meeting of the Young Peoples' Missionary society of the Salem church held Thursday evening proved to be a very interesting one and met the hearty approval of all who were fortunate enough to be in attendance. The program was unusually good and was as follows:

Thanksgiving Day.

Thanksgiving Day, 1898, has passed and with it has passed one of the finest days of the season. The day was ushered in by fine weather, by far the finest we have had this season, and Thanksgiving weather, as a rule, is inclement. The sun was shining all day, which made it pleasant for pedestrians.

The day was fittingly and appropriately observed by all our churches and some elegant programs were rendered to the enjoyment of those in attendance. The schools were closed all day and most of the business houses had their keys turned at noon, to give the employe and employer a half-day's recreation from the confinement of their labors to give thanks to the Almighty for the past year's blessings bestowed upon themselves and the nation.

No disturbances of any kind took place during the entire day to mar the peace and tranquility of one of the finest Thanksgiving days that Barrington has had for several years.

MY POOR WIFE.

BY J. P. SMITH.

CHAPTER I.

"Don't, Paul—don't stare at me like that!" cried my wife, leaning forward on her chair and laying her small hot palm across my eyes, with a gesture half scared, half petulant, that irritated me vaguely. "I—I don't like it, dear."

"I beg your pardon, Helen," I responded somewhat huffily, drawing back. "I really was not aware you objected so pointedly to my looking at you."

"I don't—I don't!" she broke in eagerly. "How could you imagine such a thing? It was the expression of your face, Paul, that took me back for the moment, when I turned my head and found you sitting there watching me with such a critical, searching sort of look, almost as if you—"

"As if I what, sweetheart?" I asked, appeased by the caressing touch.

"As if you saw something in me you could not quite make out, and did not like at all—at all! But I was mistaken in that, wasn't I, Paul?"

Then, after a moment's pause, as I did not reply—

"Sure it was only foolish fancy on my part? Say it was only that—ah, say it was only that, love!" she whispered, in the soft drawing brogue I was learning to like.

"Well, dear," I answered slowly, "as you press me so, I must admit I was a little surprised, after leaving you on the lawn romping with the dogs in the very ecstasy of high spirits, declaring that even the twenty-first of June was too short a day to be happy in, to find you half an hour later sitting here alone, to all appearance a prey to the profoundest melancholy, your eyes perfect wells of despair, looking as if the burthen of existence was too heavy to be borne another summer's day."

"It was heavy—so heavy! You are right. I could not have borne it much longer. For the last twenty minutes I—I have been your widow, Paul."

"Oh," I said, with a feeling of unaccountable relief, stroking her tumbled silky hair, "I see! You were my widow, madam—a very flattering and satisfactory explanation of your appearance indeed! But, dear, don't you think, all circumstances considered, it is rather premature for either of us to don the weeds even in spirit yet?"

She was nineteen, as fresh and as hardy as the mountain heather she had lived among all her life. I was twenty-five, stood six feet one in my stockings, and had not known an hour's illness since I had the measles many years before.

"That was not the kind of widowhood I meant," Helen said, looking at me with a touch of pathetic reproach in her strange eyes. "Your death, your mere bodily extinction, Paul, would not grieve me for long; I should cease to mourn you soon enough."

"Mrs. Dennys," I exclaimed, in mock indignation, "explain yourself, please! You surely would give me the conventional year of crape at the least?"

"No, I wouldn't—not a year, not a week, not a day, for I would die the same moment you did. Do you think I could live and you dead, husband?"

"And yet you say you were my widow for full twenty minutes, true daughter of Erin?"

"That was because I had lost you in a way that severed us in life as well as in death."

"Lost me in a way that severed us in life as well as in death? This is dreadful weather for conundrums! I give it up!" I responded languidly.

"I—was widowed, Paul, because I had lost your love—because you cared for another woman more than for me," she returned, in a low voice, looking at me with eyes full of tragic denunciation; as Rebecca might have looked at Ivanhoe, as poor La Valliere at Louis when she bade him her last good-bye outside the convent gates.

I laughed a little too boisterously, I felt, and drew her to my side.

"To be sure, to be sure," I assented volubly, "I never thought of that solution! How long is it since I first learned to care for you, ma belle? That day you and I slipped down the mountain side through the yellow broom?—let me see—seven, eight, why, nearly nine months ago! A long spell of constancy—almost time I should be warning for another love, isn't it?—Some men, you know, would like a change of wife with every change of coat; but as I happened to be of rather conservative kidney, I think I ought to be able to wear one wife to three coats at the least, and I believe I courted you in the very cloth your fingers are caressing now. It's getting a bit shabby, to be sure; but—"

"You may treat my words lightly," she interrupted, leaning over me with half-closed eyes, a bright pink spot burning on her cheeks. "I still stick to my opinion, something tells me I shall lose you, as I say—some day!"

"Feed your melancholy on the fancy," I retorted, with peevish uneasiness, feeling somewhat that I had said too much, "if it pleases you. I wonder if your morbid eye of prophecy sees any chance of my losing you as you are to lose me?"

She seemed at first not to understand, then answered quickly—

"You lose me? Oh, no, no! Whatever happens, no matter how bitterly you may make me suffer, you could not lose me that way."

"Am I to thank the gods, I wonder? What, Helen! Through treachery, desertion, indifference, brutality even, you will still cling to me like a limpet—eh? Are you sure, quite sure there is no other way but commonplace dissolution through which I can shake you off? Think, wife—think!" I retorted banteringly, when, to my surprise and alarm, the look of scared, almost agonized, melancholy stole over her dark winsome face again, her arms tightened convulsively round my neck, her burning lips were pressed close to my ear, as she gasped out—

"You know—you know—you have guessed how you can lose me, then? I—I feared you would—soon—soon. Oh, they ought to have told you in time! It was wrong—wrong. I tried to tell you, often, but the words wouldn't come. I—I am not to blame. Oh, Paul, Paul, my dear, if you had not taught me to love you so well—I—I—"

CHAPTER II.

Thoroughly startled I sprang to my feet, roughly lifting her from the floor whither she had sunk, and held her firmly before me.

"Helen," I cried, "do you know what you are saying? What—what is the matter with you? This is the way you went on that day, at Lucerne, shortly after we were married; what do you mean? I—I insist on an explanation! Speak out at once—I tell you at once!"

She looked at me with gleaming eyes, and utterly colorless face, her lips moving, but no sound coming.

"What is it?" I repeated, my wrath rising, horrible suspicion blackening my mind. "How have you deceived me? What have you done that I—I should have been told of before I married you? Helen, speak, or by Heaven, I'll—"

"I have done—nothing," she answered, standing straight before me, not the least sign of fear in her face. "You may kill me if you like, I sha'n't mind much; but I have done no harm, you should know that well. One day of my life was as dull, innocent, uneventful as another until I met you."

"Then what do you mean by these hints and wild words? Why—why do you thus torture, and try to raise a demon in me, little me?" I asked, very much ashamed of my brutal outburst. "Tell me, Helen?"

"I don't know—I don't know," she replied, bursting into tears and laying her white face on my shoulder.

"I mean—nothing—nothing. What should I mean? I—I can't help it, I suppose. Oh, pity me, pity me and bear with me if you can, dear boy! It's—it's not all my fault. My poor mother was like that before I—I was born."

"Your mother, dear?" I asked presently, when she was quite herself again, and apparently as much ashamed of her outburst as I was of mine. "I never heard you speak of her before. Do you remember her at all?"

"No; she died when I was a baby; but I often heard Molly speak of her," she answered quickly.

"And your father?"

"My—my father?"

"Yes, did you not know him?"

After a slight pause she said—

"No, I did not know him. I believe he died even before her. He was an Englishman, and they knew very little of him at home. Granny did not like him, I believe. Paul, let me sit up; Miss Stopford is coming up the avenue."

I withdrew my arm quickly, and, moving into the shade behind her chair, said as carelessly as I could—

"So she is. You and Edie seem to be striking up a powerful friendship, Helen; she was here yesterday afternoon, and on Tuesday morning also; wasn't she?"

"Yes; don't you like her coming?"

"Of course I like it. I don't think you could have a pleasanter companion than Edith, or one who—"

"Could civilize me more effectually. I quite agree with you; Edith is doing her best to tone me down, Paul; I hope she may succeed. How pretty she is!" sighed Helen, as her visitor passed the window where we were sitting. "I think she looks fairer in blue than in any other color, Paul. I often wonder how you escaped falling in love with that girl."

I shrugged my shoulders vaguely. "You have known her since she was a child, haven't you?" she pursued, as I made no reply.

"Yes. During my sister's lifetime she almost lived with us. She and poor Lily had the same governess, studied together—all that, you know."

"And one seldom falls in love with a person one has known all one's life—looked upon as a sister, you mean Paul?"

"I suppose not."

"And yet your namesake, long ago, Paul, gives the lie to that theory."

"My namesake?"

"Yes; the Paul who loved Virginia."

"Oh! He was an unusual specimen of tropical produce; besides, it's not fair to quote him as—"

"Hush! Here she is!"

Greetings of the new comer over, I retired to a distant window, and took up the field; but my eyes wandered from the close, cramped print to the heads of the girls bending over their work, and thought what a charming picture they made in the chastened golden light, and how reflectively my wife's dark tumbled locks threw out the smooth coronet of burnished gold that crowned Edith's stately head.

She was a most beautiful woman—all, fair, with soft blue eyes heavily lashed, and a faultless profile. Never before had I seen her look so attractive as she did on that evening while she directed Helen's little clumsy brown hand across that square of oatmeal cloth on which such wonderful birds, butterflies, and flowering vegetation were to blossom into life. Her dress, of a light blue stuff, trimmed with delicate lace, fitted her exquisitely, and there was a suggestion of graceful poetic perfection about her general appearance, her every movement, that was most soothing to the senses that lazy summer day. I felt as if I could have watched her with unsatiated pleasure for hours at a stretch—"a daughter of the gods, divinely tall and divinely fair"—while Helen, my wife, was a most distinct child of earth, small, dark-haired, dark-eyed, with unformed babyish features, and a skin which, though pure and healthy, lacked the delicate peach-bloom of the other. Was she ordinarily pretty or almost plain? I still asked myself that question after nine months of matrimony, and could arrive at no satisfactory solution. For Helen was seldom the same, either in mind, manner, or looks, two hours together.

One hour she would look, even in the most partial eyes, dull, commonplace, hopelessly unattractive—the next, for no apparent cause, her appearance would change, her cheeks glow, her eyes gleam with a light that I vaguely felt for a moment would, in most men's opinion, dim Edith's placid beauty into insignificance. She had certainly very strange eyes—I never could ascertain their exact shade. Sometimes they were deep, dark, still, like water in heavy shadow—again, they were all life with flickering tawny lights, as they were that moment, when raised to Edith's in rueful expostulation.

"Oh, Miss Stopford, please don't ask me to change my wool again! Let me finish to the stalk in this brown yellow."

"My dear Mrs. Dennys, impossible! You have only three shades in the leaf as yet, and I have changed my wool as many as three-and-twenty times in a single spray of virgin vine."

"Have you? Then I'll never be an artist in crewels!" laughed Helen, the cloth dropping lazily from her hands; whereupon Jim, her little terrier, thinking the lesson over, jumped briskly up on her lap, upsetting her workbasket, the contents of which rolled over the waxed boards—scissors, tapes, needles, bodkins went right and left. A stout reel of black cotton traveled languidly my way, and, stooping to pick it up, the golden hair of the only woman I ever loved brushed my forehead deliciously.

"Meet me at the end of the cedar-walk in half an hour," she said in a quick whisper, with downcast eyes, fumbling for the reel that I, in my agitation, had dropped again. "I have something to say to you."

I nodded, lay back in my chair, and instinctively held up the paper to shade my face from observation. When my wife called me over to drink a cup of tea, I glanced apprehensively into a mirror to see if the color had faded from my temples yet. No, it was still there, burning brightly, even through my tanned skin.

"Meet me at the end of the cedar-walk in half an hour," I repeated stupidly, again and again, as I strolled across the lawn towards Bretton Hall, the residence of General Stopford, Edith's uncle, and my grandfather's brother. "What does it mean? What can she have to say to me? I can't understand it."

From the Birmingham (England) Mail: A remarkable case of a woman regaining her hearing after years of deafness has been brought under my notice. Jamaica has the largest fruit plantation in the world, of which 28,000 acres are owned by an American company, and the other, 16,000 acres, are held under lease by the same company, making the total acreage owned and operated by them 44,000. This company owns and employs in the fruit carrying business twelve steamers, and last year shipped to America and elsewhere.

From the London Daily News: The last Indian mail brings some interesting particulars of the marriage of Lady Elizabeth Bruce and Mr. Babington Smith at Simla. Among the wedding gifts were a pearl and diamond bracelet presented by fifty-seven young ladies of Simla, and a turquoise and pearl necklace from a hundred Simla children. The wedding cake was a masterpiece by M. Tancredi, the vicerey's cook, who had been at work on it for two months. It weighed seven hundred pounds, stood nine feet high, and was surmounted by a beautifully executed vase full of orange and orchid blossoms.

Bachelor Women.
Just now there is going on a very nice little storm in a teacup about "Bachelor Women." It was started by an article in the Contemporary, which informed the world—rather late, one would have thought—that there exist in London alone a large number of single women who earn their own living, have their own "rooms" and clubs and, in fact, prefer a single life. Whereupon up rose a certain lady, well known in the writing world, and poured out her soul in indignation. "Time was," she declared, "when we should have flatly refused to believe that women voluntarily gave up their chances of becoming wives and mothers in order to live the selfish and useless life of the bachelor about town. It is still difficult to believe that the bachelor woman can ever become a recognized feature of our social life. She must ever remain a phenomenon, selfish and self-centered, calling for the pity rather than the envy of those who keep to the beaten track." Dear, dear! Why all the fair writer were to see the inner workings of some of these coteries of earnest, industrious women, she would be surprised at the esprit de corps, the mutual charity, the absence of pettiness which she would find. Such a life develops in us a kind of manliness which includes some of the better characteristics of the other sex. As a matter of fact, the happy married woman is far more "selfish and self-centered" than the working spinster—hers being none the less selfishness because it includes a second self. There are exceptions, of course, but not many. Now, modern conditions of life cause London and the other big cities to be flooded with female labor. Young, untried girls go out into the field to fight their poor, little battle. Believe me, they will stand far more chance of help from the bachelor woman who has gone through her own struggle than from the matron who has never looked beyond the four walls of her narrow vineyard. Sympathy is not taught by experience. To cultivate it, as Ruskin says, "you must be among human beings, and thinking about them."

CONSULTING A WOMAN.

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Inspires Confidence and Hope.

Examination by a male physician is a hard trial to a delicately organized woman. She puts it off as long as she dare, and is only driven to it by fear of cancer, polypos, or some dreadful ill. Most frequently such a woman leaves a physician's office where she has undergone a critical examination with an impression, more or less, of discouragement.

This condition of the mind destroys the effect of advice; and she grows worse rather than better. In consulting Mrs. Pinkham no hesitation need be felt, the story is told to a woman and is wholly confidential. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass., she offers sick women her advice without charge.

Her intimate knowledge of women's troubles makes her letter of advice a wellspring of hope, and her wide experience and skill point the way to health. "I suffered with ovarian trouble for seven years, and no doctor knew what was the matter with me. I had spells which would last for two days or more. I thought I would try Lydia E. ## Commercial Education.

A report was recently made to the New York chamber of commerce by a committee appointed for that purpose on the question of the best preliminary equipment for the commercial man. This question is one of interest for all parts of the country, as it touches the requirements of what is now rising to the importance of a profession. The tremendous competitions of modern life and the more intricate elements which enter into that competition require a far better preparation on the part of the young man adopting the life of trade than they did even a quarter of a century since. The report referred to above recommended that advanced commercial courses should be inaugurated in the high schools of our public system and also that special schools, free of tuition, should be endowed by the merchants of large cities to carry commercial education perhaps still further.

No better example can be cited of the value of the higher commercial training than can be drawn from the experience of the German schools. The German clerks have proved themselves so thorough and useful that in England and her dependencies they have steadily crowded out the English themselves in the employment of English merchants. Commercial training has by this example been steadily improving in a variety of special schools in England, and the standard has been greatly raised there. In France large commercial schools are maintained in the principal cities either by government aid or through endowment. In the United States it is felt that the so called commercial colleges, though useful in their day, do not fully provide the requisite instruction, and there are special courses of a commercial value in some of our leading colleges and universities, but such advantages are closed to many, and the importance of ingrafting the choice of such a course on our high school system has been realized in a variety of ways. One thing is certain—the man who succeeds today in commercial enterprises on a large scale must bring to his work a special fitness to grapple with conditions such as he never needed before. While this is specially true of the great seaport cities, where international trade is so important, it is also true in a noticeable degree of all considerable commercial enterprise everywhere. The awakening interest in the subject gives guarantee that it will not be neglected in practical effort.

The warclouds which are now disturbing the horizon of European civilization in view of oriental questions give interest to the latest official figures of the strength of European navies. Great Britain is credited with 52 battleships, 18 armored cruisers, 95 protected cruisers, 16 unprotected, and 100 destroyers. These which are now ready for immediate use with others near completion make a total of 359 ships of war, most of them of the highest degree of efficiency. Against this showing France has a total of only 140 war vessels, including 27 battleships and 9 armored cruisers. The English ships are said to be not only superior in number, but as much ahead in gun power, speed and coal capacity. More than 50 of the English cruisers can steam at 20 knots an hour without forced draft. In battleships and cruisers Great Britain is equal to France, Germany, Russia and Italy combined, while in torpedo boats and destroyers her aggregate is somewhat less. As any war now in sight would be fought mainly on the sea, the fitness of our British cousins for an emergency needs no comment.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in an after dinner speech recently made at Pittsburgh before a great company of the most prominent manufacturers, asserted that nowhere else in the world could steel be made so cheaply. Yet the leading companies are organizing a trust with the purpose, as alleged, of advancing the price of rails and structural steel fully 10 per cent.

The crop of absurd rumors about the Philippines which the Paris press during the sittings of the peace commission have evolved from their inner consciousness would make Baron Munchausen blush for his own incompetency. Yellow journalism in America is feeble in comparison.

General Corbin's Report.

The report of the adjutant general of the army furnishes a very interesting summary of the statistics of the army during the late war, including the regulars and volunteers. In August the full strength of the regular army was 2,323 officers and 58,365 enlisted men, while that of the volunteers was 6,785 officers and 307,244 men, a total of 374,717 officers and men either engaged in campaigning or ready to move at a moment's notice. To fill up the quota there were during the fiscal year 24,248 enlistments and 5,273 re-enlistments among the regulars and over 40,000 to round out the quota of the state troops. Four times as many applied as were accepted, and seven-eighths of the enlisted men were native born. The whole army was essentially an army of Americans, and what glory it won by its gallantry was peculiarly national.

The troops sent to Manila up to the end of October numbered 18,363 officers and men, those dispatched to Porto Rico 17,003, and General Shafter's army in Cuba consisted of about 18,000 men of all ranks. The total number of officers and soldiers, then, whose services have been used in the field reaches a little more than 48,000, a very small showing of military power to have achieved the remarkable results secured in so brief a campaign. In spite of the impression current of the great mortality in our organization camps from sickness, the statistics show up to Oct. 3 a total death list from all causes of 2,910, a trifle more than 1 per cent. This mortality under all the conditions was astonishingly small, and it is worth remembering that there were at least half a dozen instances when the number killed on one or the other side on single battlefields of the late civil war was more than double this grand total.

General Corbin in discussing the question of a reconstruction of army methods is opposed to a general reorganization of the staff, arguing that it had done excellently well in the civil and the Indian wars, and asserting that its more recent work is not appreciated because not fully understood. In this connection, however, it may be said that the adjutant general's views are not shared by a majority of the most experienced of our military authorities. This whole question will probably be thoroughly thrashed out in the next congress.

The Delaware Indians, the most intelligent, peaceful and friendly of all the Indian tribes found by the white men on the North American continent, will soon emigrate in a body to Mexico, according to present probabilities. The name will at once recall Chingachgook and Uncas, those splendid heroes of Cooper, to every romance lover. With this tribe also William Penn made his celebrated treaty. Originally the Delaware and the other sept of the Lenni Lenape nation occupied a large part of the eastern United States, numbering about 200,000 souls. They were faithful to the colonies during the Revolutionary war and to the north during the civil war, not only with their sympathy, but with their rifles. What were left of them were settled under treaty rights in Kansas in 1866, and the land was solemnly guaranteed to them in perpetuity with the faith of the nation behind the title. But it is the old story over again, and the Indian finds he has no rights. The Delawares will dispose of their valuable Kansas lands and probably accept the proposition of Mexico, which has offered them valuable holdings of land in Sonora. And so will pass from the United States a tribal remnant of the red men so interestingly involved with the whole earlier history of the United States.

The versatile Li Hung Chang, who has been a jack at all trades in Chinese politics, it seems has not fully secured his favor with the dowager empress, who now wields the scepter. He has been sent to co-operate with another viceroy, he of Shangtung, to devise measures to prevent the inundations of the Yellow river. As this problem has been the despair of China and modern science as well, the billet is like that of accepting the Chilton Hundreds in England—retiring to political obscurity. No wonder the wily old politician kicked and swore Chinese fashion.

The new republic, the United States of Central America, has a rebellion on its hands with great promptitude. The president of the state of San Salvador has been captured and another of the fizzling eruptions with which the Spanish Americans amuse themselves will needs be corked up. The principal bloodshed will probably be that of a firing party and a few captured rebels ranged against a blank wall.

A Sure Sign of Croup

Hoarseness in a child that is subject to croup is a sure indication of the approach of the disease. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough has appeared, it will prevent the attack. Many mothers who have croupy children always keep this remedy at hand and find that it saves them much trouble and worry. It can always be depended upon and is pleasant to take. For sale by A. S. As to its efficacy, I have been informed by scores of persons of the good results they have received from it, and know its value from the use of it in my own household. It is so pleasant to take that we have to place the bottle beyond the reach of the children. E. J. SCANTLEBURY. For sale by A. S. Olms, Palatine and A. L. Waller, Barrington.

Physical Endurance.

It should be impressed upon all young persons that during life each member of the body, in the very act of living, produces poison to itself, notes a writer in Popular Science Monthly. When this poison accumulates faster than it can be eliminated, which always occurs unless the muscle has an interval of rest, then will come fatigue, which is only another expression for toxic infection. If the muscle is given an interval of rest, so that the cell can give off its waste product to keep pace with the new productions, the muscle will then liberate energy for a long time. This latter condition is what we call endurance.

The power and endurance of the human machine is limited according to our understanding of the above facts, and also our recognition of its slowness in getting started. Like any other ponderous and intricate machine, the body requires time to get in harmonious working order. The brain, nerves, heart and skeletal muscles must be given some warning of the work they are expected collectively to perform. Ignorance of this fact has broken down many a young man who aspired to honors on the harder path.

The necessity of getting all the parts of the body slowly in working order is well understood by trainers and jockeys on the race track, as is evidenced by the preliminary "warming up" they give their horses, although it is doubtful if the trainers could give any physiologic reason for this custom.

His Wonderful Curios.

The author of "Idyls of Spain" speaks of a notary whom he met, whose naive simplicity surely could not be exceeded. "He asked for our autographs, and I inquired whether he was a collector of such trifles."

"Yes, sir," he replied, "I am, and among others I have a most precious collection of anonymous ones."

"Beaming with delight, he produced a rare manuscript of the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, exquisitely written, and with the initial letters beautifully painted."

"Senores," he cried with enthusiasm, "look at this. Isn't it a beauty? I'm always collecting such things. Then I have just purchased by letter the manuscript of the "Iliad," written by Homer himself, his own handwriting. The pity of it is that the work is not written in Greek."

"At this Miguel came to the rescue, for Luis and I were almost hysterical with amusement."

"I say," inquired Miguel, "what document would your worship like most to have in your possession?"

"Why," answered the notary, "the telegram from Christopher Columbus announcing the discovery of the new world."

Bananas in Typhoid Fever.

After a long experience with typhoid patients, Dr. Ussery of St. Louis maintains that the best food for them is the banana. He explains by stating that in this disease the lining membrane of the small intestines becomes intensely inflamed and engorged, eventually beginning to slough away in spots, leaving well defined ulcers, at which places the intestinal walls become dangerously thin.

Now, a solid food, if taken into the stomach, is likely to produce perforation of the intestines, dire results naturally following, and, this being the case, solid foods or those containing a large amount of innutritious substances are to be avoided as dangerous.

But the banana, though it may be classed as a solid food, containing as it does some 95 per cent nutrition, does not possess sufficient waste to irritate the sore spots. Nearly the whole amount taken into the stomach is absorbed, giving the patient more strength than can be obtained from other food.—American Druggist.

A Mountain of Sulphur.

The "Soufriere," or sulphurous mountain, is considered to be the greatest natural curiosity of St. Lucia, and, in fact, of the West Indies. It is situated about half an hour's ride from the town of Soufriere, to which it has given its name, and nearly two miles to the east of the Pitons, and is at the foot of two small hills, both of which are quite bare of vegetation on the sides facing the crater.

It covers a space of about three acres and is crusted over with sulphur and alum. There are several caldrons in a perpetual state of ebullition. The water is quite black in the larger ones and boils up to the height of two or three feet, but in the smaller ones it is quite clear.

Visitors never fail to boil some eggs in one of the smaller caldrons, obtaining them from one of the creole guides, who keep a supply on hand on purpose.

Personal Reflection.

"Are you a resident of this ward?" asked the challenger.

"I reckon I am, sir," replied Tuffold Knutt.

"Where do you have your washing done?" pursued the challenger, still unconvinced.

"Sir," rejoined Tuffold Knutt witheringly, "I've been votin off an on fur 29 year, an nobody ever axed me that question before."—Chicago Tribune.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO HORTICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Orchards in Hard Places.

In an address before the Wisconsin State Horticultural Society, Geo. J. Kellogg said in part:

In recommending the best plan most likely to succeed on low situations and poor orchard soil, I would go back to the foundation and plant four seeds of the most hardy apple or crab known, such as Duchess and Hibernial or Virginia crab, plant these in a well prepared spot where the future orchard tree is to stand, protect by a bit of fence board on the southwest side, and so staked and cultivated that a good growth may be secured; the first fall remove all but two of the most vigorous seedlings, bank up for winter and if the size is sufficient to carry a cion, the following spring graft two inches below the crown with Duchess, Hibernial, Charlamoff and Virginia crab for those kinds less hardy. If the seedlings are too small at one year then continue the growth another season and graft at two years.

The advantage of grafting the seedling without transplanting is to get the benefit of the whole root and in no other way can the full benefit be obtained; grafting two inches below ground will insure the rooting of the scion; using Virginia crab as a stock upon which at two to three feet to graft, or bud in the limbs, varieties which are less hardy. Such varieties as Duchess, Hibernial, Glass Green and a few others may be grafted at the ground. The grafts should be shaded by a bit of board till large enough to be protected by the lath shield. Graft two seedlings, then remove one later on.

Second plan. Set two root grafts of short roots and long scions where the future orchard tree is to stand; protect the same as before; take up the weakest if both grafts grow; always prune the growing tree when the bud can be removed with the thumb; have one central trunk and side branches at right angles six to twelve inches apart; stimulate the tree to early growth but do not cultivate after July, or cause more than a moderate growth of wood each year. After trees come to bearing do not let them overbear, or starve to death; a tree should be fed in proportion to its fruitage. Most old orchards are starved to death. The best fertilizer for fruit is hard wood ashes sowed broadcast at the rate of 100 bushels per acre annually. I would recommend for hard places only Duchess, Hibernial, Glass Green, Charlamoff, McMahon, Wealthy, Repka Malenka, Longfield and Patton's Greening of apples, and all but the first four top worked on Virginia crab. Whitney, Virginia, Martha and Sweet Russet for crabs. Apple seed must be planted fresh from the apple in the fall, or if dry, soaked till it is plump, then frozen, mixed with sand and planted in spring.

The San Jose Scale.

We fear our readers may become tired of seeing this heading in the various farm papers, but we assure them there is reason for a frequent mention of this pest. We know that some men that have orchard stock to sell are trying to belittle the danger, but the danger exists in spite of their efforts to lull the country into a fancied security. The state entomologist of California says that without doubt the San Jose scale is the greatest pest that has ever menaced the orchards of this country. In California it has become so prevalent that it is no longer considered possible to eradicate it. The only thing left to do is to fight it in every orchard and try to grow fruit in spite of it. Spraying has only the effect of keeping down the generations of young ones when they make their appearance on the orchard trees in large numbers. But in the forests where the scale has got a foothold no spraying that will be effective can be done. This should stimulate the horticulturists east of the Rocky mountains to do what they can to prevent the spread of the scale, knowing as we do that once the pest is among our wild trees it will be impossible of extinction. Every state should take energetic measures to protect its borders. We raise troops and spend millions to keep out foreign invaders when they come in the form of men. Why not spend money as freely when it is necessary to repel an insect invasion?

The Grain Weevil.

A bulletin sent out from the Indiana experiment station says: Numerous inquiries have recently come to the experiment station concerning a small insect which is described as doing great damage to the wheat in granaries. With one exception no specimens have accompanied the letters, but from the descriptions given it is very evident that the insect is one of the grain weevils which commonly infest wheat stored in bins.

One of the most common of these little beetles is Calandria granaria, a small, dark reddish snout beetle, which deposits its eggs upon the grain. These eggs soon hatch into small, footless larvae, that eat out the substance of the kernels, and become full-grown in a few weeks. They then change to pupae and soon after again transform to adult beetles. There are several broods each season, so they may be found at almost any time during the summer and autumn. While there are several species of these grain weevils, the same remedy will do for all. As these insects penetrate all through the entire bulk of grain, it is necessary to apply some substance that is equally penetrating in its nature. This is found in carbon bisulphide, which may be had at any drug store. The vapor of this substance is very poisonous and will destroy all insect life with which it comes in contact. This material is also very explosive when brought in contact with fire. Keeping these two points in mind it may be handled with perfect safety. In applying the material it is well to keep in mind the fact that it is very volatile and quickly passes into vapor, which diffuses itself throughout the entire mass of grain, and as the vapor is heavier than air it will have a tendency to settle. But in order to insure perfect results it is best to introduce the material well down toward the middle of the mass of grain by means of a gaspipe with a screen over the lower end, which will prevent the wheat filling the pipe, and through which the poison may be poured. The pipe is then withdrawn. One pound of the bisulphide is sufficient for fifty bushels of grain. One application will be sufficient unless the grain is to be kept over winter, when a second application may be necessary. The material does no harm to the grain in any way, as the poisonous fumes all pass away as soon as brought in contact with the air outside.—James Troop, Horticulturist.

The German Farmer.

John E. Kehl, the United States consul at Stettin, Germany, says that the American farmer enjoys great advantages over the German farmer in the way of modern labor-saving machinery, larger tracts of land, etc. As an offset to this, the German farms in a more intensive way, and generally produces full crops. These facts, however, would not enable them to fight against depression if they did not receive state aid and had not quite a perfect system of co-operation. At many of the old universities, such as Berlin, Gottengen, Leipsic, Halle, Munich, etc., there have been founded agricultural colleges, and in all other colleges there are chairs of agriculture, with professors to lecture on the subject, thus disseminating a valuable amount of practical scientific knowledge.

"Co-operation," say the Germans, "is the farmer's stronghold and bulwark." There are co-operative credit banks, co-operative dairies, co-operative steam plows, and there is co-operation in drainage and irrigation. As a rule, the farms are devoid of small undergrowth, stumps, stones, creeping vines, etc. Timber is equally well cared for. In draining and irrigating, the farmers are experts. At present a perplexing question is how to stop or check the exodus of labor to the cities, where wages are higher. The salaries paid farm laborers vary, but average 35 cents per day (50 cents during harvest), with the use of a small house, patch of ground (about one-half acre), and the privilege of using the implements for cultivation of same. Single men who board with their employer are paid considerably less. The German government is endeavoring, both by legislation and education, to enable the farmer to compete with his rivals.

Varieties of Wheat.

The Pennsylvania station has been testing wheats for more than ten years. Of those that were tested for eight years it says:

For the varieties tested eight years the average yield of the first five is as follows: Reliable, 32.70; Fulcaster, 32.10; Ontario Wonder, 31.19; Wyandotte Red, 30.66, and Dietz Longberry Red, 30.64. For those tested four years, the yield of the first three is as follows: Royal Australian, 32.47; Jones' Square Head, 31.27 and The Pool, 31.25. It will be noted that the order of yield for 1897 varies considerably from that of all the years in which the varieties were tested, proving that the results obtained from a single year's trial, is not an accurate test of the value of a variety but that it should be continued through at least two or three years in order that the test be of any material value.

Farm Buildings Too Far Apart.—We see quite frequently houses and barns located quite a distance apart, so far indeed that it requires several minutes' time to go from one to the other. If house and barn are only 100 feet too far apart, and we make but three trips back and forth each day, in a week's time we have traveled about an extra mile and in twenty years will have gone a thousand miles out of our way, or farther than necessary. We would think it a hard task indeed if compelled to start out once even in twenty years and walk a thousand miles without any compensation therefor.—Ex.

Too much corn for the chickens will bring on indigestion and liver troubles.

EVENTS IN ILLINOIS.

Seven Days' Doings in the Prairie State—Telegrams Received from Various Points.

Joke May Result in Death.

Moline, Ill.—Dr. William P. Sensibaugh, a dentist of Port Byron, just east of this city, is in a serious condition as a result of pranks played upon him while being initiated in a fraternal insurance lodge in that village. During the initiatory ceremonies he was blindfolded and given several slight shocks from a live wire. The bandage over his eyes having become loosened, he sought to outwit those who were having fun at his expense by locating the wire and attempting to avoid it. One of the initiating team seeing the candidate was about to evade the wire, gave him a little shove, which unfortunately proved sufficient to throw him off his balance, and he fell hands down upon the battery itself, receiving a shock which rendered him unconscious. After working over him for two hours and finally reviving him it was discovered that his right arm hung limp and loose, and in this condition it has remained ever since. A week ago the doctor was stricken with an affection of the pneumogastric nerve. Saturday night he was in a serious condition and it became necessary to beat and chafe him and stand him on his head to secure circulation and action of the heart and lungs until a doctor arrived. Since then he has been kept up mainly through electrical treatment. One of the attending physicians says that paralysis of the nerves is threatened, in which event the sufferer cannot live.

To Buy War Goods in Chicago.

The war department has again begun to make purchases through the quartermaster's office at Chicago. During the past few days Captain C. D. Palmer, acting chief quartermaster of the department of the lakes, has received orders to buy goods valued at from $375,000 to $675,000, the quantity purchased depending somewhat on the prices. Bids for 25,000 blankets and 25,000 pairs of shoes will be opened tomorrow by Captain Palmer, and if the goods can be purchased advantageously the quantities will be doubled. The value of what the bids call for is about $150,000. Other articles for which requests have been made are tents, tent stoves, piping, coats and litters. The purchases are the most extensive which have been called for since the large one made through Chicago at the outbreak of hostilities with Spain, and Chicago merchants take it as a hopeful indication that much will soon again be ordered by the war department through Chicago.

Suffragists Elect Officers.

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois Equal Suffrage association elected the following officers:

President—Mrs. Julia Mills Dunn, Rock Island.
Vice-presidents—Mrs. Julia Holmes Smith, Chicago; Mrs. Eva Munson Smith, Springfield.
Recording secretary—Miss Lena Morrow, Freeport.
Treasurer—Mrs. C. F. Long, Barry.

The executive committee consists of the officers and Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCullough, Chicago; Mrs. Angeline Drayen, Harvey; Mrs. Gertrude Blackwelder, Morgan Park; Mrs. Loretta Moore, Danville; Dr. Julia C. Blackman, Geneva, and Dr. Catherine Miller, Lincoln.

Pekin vs. Drainage Canal.

Pekin, Ill., Special.—Pekin will not be officially represented at the meeting of the Illinois Valley association, called by Chairman Kingman of Peoria, no date for which is yet fixed. Pekin will take action on its own account regarding the drainage canal and will co-operate with other towns of the Illinois Valley in their demands for Chicago to live up to its promises. Feeling is running high in regard to this matter in this and adjoining towns, and St. Louis will be heartily indorsed in her fight to force Chicago to fulfill the pledges it has made in regard to the amount of water to be turned into the canal from Lake Michigan.

Odd Fellows Elect Officers.

Springfield, Ill.—At the grand lodge of Illinois Odd Fellows M. P. Berry of Carthage was elected grand master without opposition. L. L. McKinley of Ottawa was elected deputy grand master and J. R. Kewley of Chicago was elected grand warden.

The state convention of the Daughters of Rebekah elected the following officers:

President, Mrs. Effie A. Glazier, Chicago; vice-president, Mrs. Olive J. C. Blackman, Harrisburg; warden, Mrs. Eva R. Withey, Springfield; secretary, Mrs. Lola L. Rickard, Olney; treasurer, Mrs. Carrie E. Skaggs, Harrisburg.

Trouble in Chicago.

The fight between ex-Gov. Altgeld and Mayor Harrison has been expected for a long time, and now that it is on the Harrison people, at least, are prepared for it. Mayor Harrison's friends have already opened his campaign for a renomination and re-election, and their fear now is that Altgeld will make an effort to defeat him at the primaries and on the floor of the convention. The fight is not so much between Altgeld and Harrison as between Chicago platform Democrats and those who incline to the gold standard. Twenty-five thousand of Altgeld adherents refused to vote for the Cook county ticket because of its anti-silver complexion. That this vote defeated it is plainly shown by the fact that Dunlap, candidate for state treasurer, run 30,000 ahead of the ticket in Cook. Fifteen thousand more silver Democrats remained did not vote at all. When the election returns were scrutinized the way was clear for the present fight.

Mystery Is Solved.

The body of the girl who committed suicide in the Hotel Davidson, Milwaukee, Saturday afternoon, Nov. 5, was identified last week as that of Maggie Toomey, aged 21 years, a daughter of William Toomey of Chicago. A sister of the deceased called at the morgue and recognized the body as that of her sister, who had left home Friday, Nov. 4, about 8 o'clock in the morning. Melancholia is given as the cause for the act, the sister saying that Maggie, who was a great student, was of a quiet and at times a morose disposition. The morning she left home her mother asked where she was going, but received no reply, and since then no word had been heard of her, though a strict search had been made. The girl went to Milwaukee by a Goodrich line steamer and went direct to the hotel, where she took a dose of carbolic acid.

Papers Read to Stock Breeders.

Springfield, Ill.—At the session of the Illinois Live Stock Breeders' Association John Clay, Jr., of Chicago, delivered an interesting address on "The Marketing of Live Stock," and Thomas Shaw, professor of animal husbandry at the agricultural station of the University of Minnesota, at St. Anthony Park, Minn., addressed the convention on "The Bacon Hog." A paper on "Horse Breeding," by Norman J. Coleman, editor of Coleman's Rural World, of St. Louis, was read by Levi Chubbuck. The convention closed with an address on "The Horse and His Marks" by John A. Craig, professor of animal husbandry of the Iowa Agricultural College of Ames, Iowa.

The party will leave for Washington Friday morning, where Mr. Komura will call upon President McKinley as a direct representative of the emperor. The newly appointed minister is a graduate of Harvard University.

Martin Sentenced to Be Hanged.

Charleston, Ill., Special.—Judge Dunn heard arguments for and against a new trial in the case of Carter Martin, who murdered Albert Buser on the night of Oct. 3. The verdict of the jury was affirmed and Martin was sentenced to be hanged Dec. 16. He seemed indifferent when the judge pronounced the fatal words, but his mother, who was present, fainted and was carried from the courtroom.

What Constitutes a Good Beef Animal.

Prof. C. F. Curtis, writing in the fourteenth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry says: It was not until within recent years that the heavy, inordinately fat, or rough and patchy bullock, became unpopular to such an extent as practically to drive this class from the market and to banish the type from the breeding herds. It is well that this was done; for the modern type makes beef at decidedly more profit and economy to both the producer and the butcher and furnishes the consumer a far superior article. The parts furnishing the high-priced cuts must be thickly and evenly covered with firm yet mellow flesh of uniform good quality and alike free from hard rolls and blubbery patenes. Coarse, harsh, and gaudy animals will no longer be tolerated, much less those that are bony and bare of flesh on the back and ribs. The men who buy our cattle and fix their market value are shrewd enough to know almost at a glance how much and just what kind of meat a steer or carload of steers will cut out, and if the producer overlooks any of the essential points he is compelled to bear the loss. Then, in addition to securing the general beef form and make-up, together with good backs, ribs, and loins, there is a certain quality, character, style and finish that constitute an important factor in determining the value of beef cattle. One of the first indications of this is to be found in the skin and coat. A good feeding animal should have a soft mellow touch and a soft but thick and heavy coat. A harsh, unyielding skin is an indication of a sluggish circulation and low digestive powers. The character and finish exemplified by a clean prominent yet placid eye, clean-cut features, fine horn, and clean, firm bone, all go to indicate good feeding quality and a capacity to take on a finish of the highest excellence, and consequently to command top prices. Coarse-boned, rough animals are almost invariably slow feeders and hard to finish properly. A certain amount of size is necessary, but it should be obtained without coarseness. The present demand exacts quality and finish rather than size. Besides these qualities, and above all, it is necessary to have vigor and constitution. We find evidence of these in a wide forehead, a prominent brisket, broad chest, well-sprung ribs, full heart girth, and general robust appearance; and without these other excellence will not have its highest significance.

Effect of Silage on Milk.

Repeated experiments have shown that no fear is to be entertained as to the effect of ensilage on the quality of milk. Some of the most progressive dairymen in the country feed it, even those that are shipping milk at fancy prices to thousands of customers. Good silage fed properly is bound to improve the quality of the milk and butter rather than detract from it. If the silage is kept in the barn with the cows, and parts of the silage refuse allowed to pile up and rot in the corners of the cow stable till it becomes a fetid mass, then very likely the milk will be affected, for it is believed that the odors of such masses will readily impart themselves to the milk. This is denied, we know, by those who assert that milk will not take in odors when in the warm state, but we are suspicious of that kind of reasoning. One dairymen says that he began the feeding of silage with a good deal of fear, but after he had fed for some time his commission man wrote to him that his butter was the best in quality that it had ever been at that time of year. As the seller of the butter knew nothing about the silage being fed, the letter was taken as a proof that silage, rightly fed, improves rather than detracts from the quality of the butter. Similar incidents are constantly coming to light, and this is only part proof that silage is one of the best friends of the dairyman.

Stock on Western Ranges.

William Penn Anderson of the railway bureau of live stock statistics, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, has just completed a canvass of the range cattle of the country for the Associated Press. He says along from southern Texas to northern Montana the grass on the ranges, with the exception of a few droughty spots in the fall, was excellent. An abundant hay crop was harvested, and a greater number of cattle in proportion will be sustained throughout the coming winter than ever before. He also says there is a wonderful increase in the calf crop, as shown by the records of "round-up" foremen on the open ranges. The movement of cattle and sheep to feed lots and other eastern markets during October is almost without parallel. There is a veritable stocker famine in the Rockies and intermountain states. There are thousands of cattle being held in close herd awaiting shipment.

Fresh Air.—Fresh air is absolutely necessary for the health of your flock. Windows should be opened wide every day for a shorter or longer time, depending on the outside temperature. Fresh air dries out your houses and dispels dampness, which is fatal to fowls.

Lord Herschell on Anglo-American Union.

The annual dinner of the chamber of commerce in New York was notable specially for the address made by Lord Herschell, the president of the joint high commission. Aside from its adequate voicing of the feeling which exists in Great Britain, its chief interest lay in its discrimination of the factors which enter into this strong reciprocal sentiment which has brought the two nations so close together. Due stress was laid on the essential kinship which exists, on the solid community of sympathy and general point of view growing out of a common language and literature, on similar laws and institutions and on the traditions of a common history. Yet this tie had been frequently strained almost to the breaking point in times past by diverging interests and that tendency in a large way which is parallel to family bickering. Passing from the ground of sentiment as a basis of union to that of practical interest, Lord Herschell pointed out that the new condition of things which had arisen within the last year sealed the bond with a firmness never before existing. Like the hard headed lawyer he is, he enforced the value of the new issues in cementing the tie of race and sentiment. The commercial interests of Great Britain and the United States run now through the same channels, and there is no perceptible reason why this business union should not remain permanent. In this hand to hand clasp of the two countries Lord Herschell recognized a guarantee of the peace of the world superior even to that of the czar's policy of disarmament.
