

CHEAP FILIPINO DIET.

Low Record in Living Established at St. Louis.

WEEK'S FOOD FOR FORTY COST $4.44

Members of Samal Moro Tribe at the World's Fair Live on About 21 Cents a Week—See President Bush of Ignorant—Negatives Live on Roots and Herbs.

The Filipinos at the St. Louis world's fair have made a new record in cheap living, according to the official reports of Captain M. C. Butler, the army officer in charge of the commissary supplies of the little brown men, says the New York World. They have beaten Edward Atkinson's scheme of living on 10 cents a day for 100 days. Some of them have actually been living on a fraction over a cent and a half a day. This is the official figure, Captain Butler says, that for one week the food supply of the entire forty Samal Moros in the Moro village cost only $4.44.

These Samal Moros are the blue ribbon tribe for cheap living. The others are not far behind, however, and the reports of Captain Butler show that for one week the cost of living of these little chaps was only a little more than seven cents a day.

There are about 600 Filipinos at the fair, and, though they eat everything from dog to salted clacces and smudge Pittsburgh stogies, they cost the government but little more than $1.50 a week.

The Filipinos are divided into villages, and their style of living in the various villages differs as widely as the habits of two different nationalities. With the exception of the constabulary and the inhabitants of the Visayan village, the Filipinos here are all of the lower and semisavage type. The Negritos, for example, are the aborigines of the islands and the lowest type in intelligence and physique. They live in the mountains, without houses, and eat roots and herbs and such game as they can kill. They are the most expensive of the Filipinos here. There are thirty-eight of them, and Captain Butler's report for one week shows that they cost $2.93, and still another week only $21.23.

The constabulary, who are made up of the most civilized of the Filipinos, cost but little more. There are 420 of them. The Igorrotes are the dog eaters. Twenty dogs a week are bought for them, and this is their most expensive delicacy. The women among them do not eat dog, however, the custom being confined to the men, who have a tradition that eating dog makes them fierce and warlike. The better fighter the dog is the better food he makes, in their estimation.

The Samal Moros, who are the cheapest lives, do not eat any meat. They live chiefly on rice, which they cook themselves. Being Mohammedans they will eat nothing that is about the Americans. Hard bread, rice and chewing tobacco are the chief items on their bill of fare.

One of Captain Butler's weekly detailed reports will give an idea of how different villages of Filipinos live and how much it costs Uncle Sam. The following is for the week ended June 11:

	Persons.	Total	Per person.

The total amount of issues was $254.70. The average cost per day per person was $0.0736. The total amount of purchases was $370.07.

Penetrating Sound of the Horn.
A correspondent of the London Mail says: "I sincerely trust that motorists will not give up the use of the horn. It is the best of all things for sound for the deaf. I am stone deaf with the left ear and nearly so with the right, and have had several narrow escapes from being run over when motorists have neglected to sound or have done so too feebly."

An Idol of the Meat Striker.
Miss Maud Myrtle Green was wooed by two impetuous beaux. Each courted her fervently. And often would propose. James Henry Brown, to win her smile, took her across the lake. Adolphus Perkins, full of guile, bent her a stiletto stick. James Henry walked in helpless ire. And inwardly he boiled. When she told how she shied the fire. And had that stiletto bedevil. James Henry sent her pounds of fudge. And Adolphus sent her. Adolphus did not cash her fudge. He sent her mutton chops!

James Henry sought to knock his foe And talked of serving. Adolphus was a crafty beast— He brought a tender. James Henry sighed, "You can't believe How much I love I am." Adolphus wrote, "I mean to receive. By heaven, one large ham."

Miss Maud Myrtle Green remained. "The sweet how Henry fed. But, oh, how splendid to be spared! Each day with three square meals! But still she could not quite decide. Which one she liked the most— James Henry spoke of stiletts. Adolphus sent a roast.

At last James Henry came to call. And brought a stiletto. He said, "I love Henry is so small— But may I put this there?" He filled James Henry's glass. He said: "That old style thing! Adolphus sent a ham. He brought a beef bone ring."

MRS. CECILIA STOVEL, Omaha, Sains News Club.

178 Warren Avenue, Chicago, Ill., Oct. 22, 1902.
For nearly four years I suffered from ovarian troubles. The doctor insisted on an operation, and the only way to get well. I, however, strongly objected to an operation. My husband felt dislocated as well as I, for home with a sick woman is a disagreeable place to live. A friendly druggist advised me to get a bottle of Wine of Cardui for me to try, and he did so. I began to improve the day and my recovery was very rapid. Within eighteen weeks I was another being.

SHARKEY TO THE RESCUE.

Pugilist Arrested Sleek Actress to Street at Request of Priest.
Dr. Nagle of Bellevue hospital responded to an ambulance call to an apartment house in New York the other night. On the third floor he found Mrs. Elizabeth Drew, thirty-eight years old, a vaudeville actress, suffering from aneurism of the neck, says the New York Times. The Rev. Father William O'Reilly of St. Ann's church, in East Twelfth street, near Fourth avenue, was attending the woman when Dr. Nagle arrived. The surgeon advised her removal to the hospital. Mrs. Drew was practically helpless and Dr. Nagle began to wonder how he would get her down to the ambulance. She weighs 140 pounds, and Dr. Nagle is a small man.

"Wait a minute," volunteered Father O'Reilly, "and I'll see if I can find you a strong man."
As he reached the street he met Tom Sharkey, the sailor pugilist, and Mrs. Sharkey. Father O'Reilly knows the pugilist, and he called out the priest: "You're just the man I want. Will you help carry a sick woman to the ambulance?"

"Sure, father," said Sharkey. "I'm right on the job."
Sharkey mounted the stairs behind the priest, when he reached the sickroom he looked at Dr. Nagle. "Father O'Reilly tells me you want a lift dog," said the pugilist, his chest swelling out.

Nagle looked at Sharkey and sized him up. "Guess you might as well do the whole job," he said.
Sharkey stooped over, picked up Mrs. Drew as if she were a baby and slowly walked down the stairs.

"Don't be afraid. I'll get you an ambulance on the way," said Sharkey, who had carried a thousand miles, Sharkey kept repeating as he descended.
Reaching the sidewalk Sharkey found his way to the ambulance blocked by a crowd of men. Two policemen stood near, but they made little impression on the crowd.

"Gents, will yer please get a move on," said Sharkey in an ordinary voice. The way was quickly cleared and the pugilist placed Mrs. Drew tenderly in the bus.
"Thanks, Tom," said Father O'Reilly. "Don't mention it, father," replied Sharkey as he again offered his arm to Mrs. Sharkey.

MAN'S ASHES FOR A BEAUTY

Grim Method of Demonstrating Unhealthy Attections.
Miss Christine Prince, an actress, was the unsuspecting victim of a dead man's grim remembrance, says a Los Angeles (Cal.) dispatch. She received by express a silver case of oblong shape containing human ashes, those of Robert Conklin, who in life had been devotedly in love with her, and they were sent by his attorney.
Conklin came into Miss Prince's career when she was a young girl, having left her father as a prospector in Colorado more than ten years ago. He fell in love, proposed marriage, was rejected and drifted away into the foothills of the Rockies. He came back later to be again rejected. He then went to live near Denver, but kept up a correspondence until a few months ago, how long is not stated. In June Miss Prince heard of his death.

WHITE HOUSE INNOVATION.

Plates Tell Under Whose Administration Furniture Was Bought.
Hereafter those who desire souvenirs from the White House will need to exercise a little care before carrying away James Henry's spoils. The president, says a Washington special dispatch to the New York World. Every piece of furniture has been marked with a brass plate bearing the name of the president who was in the White House when the article was bought. The scheme is the product of the brain of Colonel Brownwell, the young officer of engineers who has recently become superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

The most recent purchases of furniture for the home of the president consisted of 150 gold framed chairs. These have been tagged. They are to be used when musicians or other entertainments are given at the White House. This brings the number of gold framed chairs up to 250.

Automobiles With Beds.
American millionaires who strive to outdo their neighbors have ignored the new European device of automobiles with beds. Several Parisians own these flying hotels, which cannot be excelled for purposes of continental touring. It is not absolutely necessary to use the beds for a continuous night's rest, but for a nap they fill the bill. So far none of these machines has been imported to America, although many Americans go abroad to pick out the newest departure in motor cars. The Baron Leopold de Rothschild, who owns about ten large automobiles, has ordered one of these comfortable autos. The beds are built in the tonneau and there are spaces on either side for packing clothing and carrying provisions. These motors will beds, however, are not heavy for anything except hard touring. They are the last triumph of luxury, and it is only a question of time before they will be used generally.

JAPAN'S COVETED LAND

One Great Object Is to Regain Island of Sakhalin.

ITS SEIZURE EVER A SORE SPOT.

Professor Watanabe of Tokyo University Tells of the Island's Value to Japanese—People's Will, He Says, Demanded War With Russia. Chinese Sympathy With Japan.

Professor Y. Watanabe of the University of Tokyo, who recently spent a few days in Boston studying the schools of mining and metallurgy in the Institute of Technology and Harvard university, is professor of mining and metallurgy in the great Japanese university and has charge of the Japanese mining exhibit at the St. Louis fair, says the Boston Globe. He is making a tour at the present time of the principal colleges and educational institutions in the eastern states in which mining and metallurgy are taught.

When sought at the Brunswick hotel by a Boston Globe reporter, Professor Watanabe spoke very entertainingly of the present war between Japan and Russia, and said it should be clearly understood that this was not a governmental affair. It is a war of the whole people of Japan against the encroachments of Russia. It is a national war and one which the people demand.

He left Japan in March, when the excitement was at fever heat, and then the people were ready to sacrifice everything to carry on the war.

"But," said Professor Watanabe, "the war has not disturbed the business of Japan very much. Everything is going on as before. The only thing that is going on in Russia as smoothly as before the war."

Professor Watanabe believes that if Japan is successful one of the first things she will demand from Russia is the cession of the island of Saghalien (also spelled Sakhalin), which Russia practically seized from Japan about thirty years ago. This has always been a sore spot with the Japanese. Professor Watanabe says, and it is a solid part of his case for a war, for some time in Japan dedicated to the recovery of this island, which lies very close to the Siberian province of Amur, with the Gulf of Tartary on the east-southeast and the sea of Okhotsk on the north-northwest. It has an area of 24,500 square miles and a population of 240,000. This island and the waters that surround it bear somewhat the same relation to Asia that Newfoundland does to America, for here are the great fishing grounds of the world. Pacific and as fish is a staple article of diet in Japan the island's value can very easily be seen. The Japanese have had the right to fish on the coast of Sakhalien ever since it was ceded, but they want the island back as a part of their empire. It is only separated from the island of Yezo by a narrow body of water known as La Perouse strait.

Last year the quantity of fish taken by the Japanese from the island was 1,150,000 tons, valued at $1,102,604, and the quantity taken by Russians amounted to 117,133 koku, valued at 1,678,907 yen. The Japanese have now a solid part of his case for a war, for some time in Japan dedicated to the recovery of this island, which lies very close to the Siberian province of Amur, with the Gulf of Tartary on the east-southeast and the sea of Okhotsk on the north-northwest. It has an area of 24,500 square miles and a population of 240,000. This island and the waters that surround it bear somewhat the same relation to Asia that Newfoundland does to America, for here are the great fishing grounds of the world. Pacific and as fish is a staple article of diet in Japan the island's value can very easily be seen. The Japanese have had the right to fish on the coast of Sakhalien ever since it was ceded, but they want the island back as a part of their empire. It is only separated from the island of Yezo by a narrow body of water known as La Perouse strait.

Professor Watanabe says there is little doubt that Chinese sympathy is with Japan in this war. He says that within the past few years China and Japan have been coming closer and closer in their sympathies. China has seen through the error of her excesses and she now invited Japan to send teachers to her. This Japan has done, and at the present time there are probably 1,000 Japanese teachers in China. These teachers are in all parts of the empire. Several of the professors in the University of Tokyo have gone to Peking during the past year to teach. Most of the teachers are graduates of the universities of Tokyo and Keio. These teachers get along much better in China than the teachers from any other nation, because there is such a similarity in the language of both nations.

Fundamentally the languages are the same, and what is known as the Chinese classical language is very similar to the Japanese, but modern Chinese writing is very unlike Japanese writing. The significance of this teaching by the Japanese becomes more and more apparent every day, and it does not bode well for the future of any of the European nations in China. Japan will be the dominant influence in the language of both nations.

Diamond Ring in Bird's Nest.

Arthur H. Archibald, a Jersey City lawyer, recently recovered a diamond ring valued at $175, which he had lost in an unusual place, says the New York Times. "The ring, which was rather worn," he said, "slipped from my finger several weeks ago while I was feeding a couple of pet Belgian hares, which I keep in a coop in the yard. The other day I noticed a pair of sparrows, which had their nest beside a tin ladder running down the coop. Hatching over the side of the nest was some excelsior that I knew came from the coops. Proving a ladder I decided to investigate the inside of the nest. I found three young sparrows and the ring."

GRAND ARMY SOUVENIR.

Model of Historic Saloon Will Be Seen at National Encampment.

A model has been completed by Schuyler post, No. 51, G. A. R., of Pennsylvania, located in Philadelphia, which it is planned will be presented to the Grand Army of the Republic at the Philadelphia national encampment in Boston, says a dispatch from that city. The model is an exact reproduction of the old volunteer refreshment saloon which was located on Washington street wharf in Philadelphia during the war and was a popular rendezvous of United States troops mustered out of service on their return home. The model, which will be about four feet square, in company with the old cannon which was fired when the troops disembarked at the Philadelphia port at the close of the war, will be carried in the great parade in Boston and at the close of the encampment will be presented to the Hoxbury post as a memento of the visit.

Few, if any, of the soldiers who journeyed to the Quaker City on their return ever forget the old refreshment saloon. The latching was always on the outer wall, and the good cheer within was freely dispensed. There was no style. None was expected. The tables were long and made of plain spruce boards, the crockery was such that the soldier was not to break, but the solid, substantial food that was set before the soldier was a banquet fit for the gods compared to what he had been accustomed to in camp and on the march. This model will be many incidents will be recalled when it goes through the streets on the day of the parade.
