SOCIALISM IS RIFE IN POLAND

Internal Dissension in the Russian Empire Is Fostered by the Police, Who Appear to Be Oblivious of Trend of Passing Events.

The Poles from Poland paints a picture of veritable terror before the expected storm. A letter received at St. Petersburg reads:

"You know what happened at Warsaw, but you only know part of what is occurring throughout the country. All Poland is in a great conflagration of socialism, causing everywhere a terrible panic. We expect at Easter a general insurrection of the Russian government officials and the blowing up of the Vistula bridge to prevent the arrival of troops from Russia."

"The police are doing nothing. They pretend to be blind and deaf to what is passing around them. The existing regime is the cause of discontent, which is on the increase among the workmen driven from the factories and railroads because they are Poles. They say they will have vengeance."

A letter from Vilna says: "Work is impossible under the existing conditions." The government's endless commissions have accomplished nothing, and the landowners, workmen and peasants are convinced that open revolt and the burning of the cities at Easter may witness the inauguration of another insurrection like that of 1863, which began, as this may, with a Russian massacre."

It is now quite generally believed that the promised receipt reforms, which it was reported would be introduced in Russia, will follow generally the lines advanced by the Shipoff party, which is an advisory council based on representation of the provinces and cities of the empire.

At Vladivostok, the spring festival was turned into a revolutionary demonstration. Cossacks and police dispersed the crowds, using the flats of their swords. Many persons were injured, including some women and children, but no one is reported to have been killed.

Charles M. Schwab seems to be making a big impression at St. Petersburg. His reputation as a steel expert preceded him, and he is being shown much attention by Grand Duke Alexis, high admiral; Admiral Doboassoff, head of the technical committee; Admiral Axtell, chief of the admiralty; Admiral Wiresnik, chief of staff, and other prominent naval officials. In a general way it is believed that certain arrangements touching America's share in the new naval construction which must go to foreign yards already have been agreed to in principle.

NATIONAL BANK RUN IS AVERTED

Depositors Are Required to Give Notice of Intention to Withdraw.

MAGIC NAME LOSES ITS CHARM

Boards of Directors of Various Business Concerns Meet Hurdly and Oust Frank Bigelow From Official Positions.

Milwaukee, Wis., dispatch: Frank G. Bigelow, the defaulting president of the First National bank, may be re-elected on an additional charge of insubordination on complaint filed before District Attorney J. J. McGovern. This action is contemplated by some of the bank directors who are of the opinion that Bigelow is escaping too easily from the effects of his May week speculations. The directors are divided on the question, those siding with Bigelow arguing that his defaulters ought to be covered by the liabilities of his son Gordon. The breaking of the run on the bank and Bigelow's restitution of an additional $22,000 were elements in his favor.

Two directors consulted with the district attorney relative to additional complaints against Bigelow, but action was deferred until the question of jurisdiction could be determined.

A Want to Land Accomplice. A strong desire on the part of the directors to capture and punish Assistant Cashier Henry Goll, Bigelow's accomplice in the defaulters, is also being manifested. Goll is in the state court. Goll still is at large and the federal authorities have made no effort to find him. They say there is no appropriation to use in apprehending him. Federal bank laws are those who have moved out of the district and the most they can do is send a man for him if he is apprehended in Goll is unpopular here and the general public would like to see him in jail. If the matter can be taken up in the state court Milwaukee detects there will be sent to Chicago and orders will be issued. Goll and rewards probably will be offered.

Bigelow Keeps His Counsel. Frank Bigelow was willing to talk on general subjects, but when he was asked to discuss the federal laws, his method of peacelike he shut up the a claim.

"Mr. Bigelow," said a visitor, "there is a general impression that your son Gordon was to a great extent responsible for our losses and the succeeding trouble."

"I can't talk about that," said the banker wearily. "I have said all that I am going to say on that point. The directors are in possession of all the details. If you want any information get it from them."

A good many people called and others asked after the banker's health. "Thank you, my health is good," said he in response to one of the inquiries. "I feel a little nervous, perhaps, but that is because of the trouble. It is kind of people to think of me."

One of Mr. Bigelow's married daughters came in and kissed him and cried over him.

Mr. Bigelow is richly furnished. Bigelow is a little man with gray hair and creases modestly. His home is richly furnished. Good taste is shown in the pictures, and the presence of a great many books indicates a literary turn of mind.

Gordon Bigelow was there. He is a jaunty young man with handsome face and weak mouth.

"Nothing to say," said "whatever," he said curtly, and went into another room.

Conversation with Frank Bigelow lapsed until a visitor happened to mention the National Exchange bank company, of which he is vice president, or was at the time of the conversation, was thought to be in trouble.

"That's not right," said he earnestly. "That is a misstatement. I assure you, it is in a perfectly sound condition."

Mr. Bigelow also expressed considerable interest in everything pertaining to the bank. He nodded his head when informed that the bank had taken an advantage of thirty and ninety day notes.

"That's the rule in such cases," was his comment.

Bank Run Is Stopped. The expected run on the First National bank was averted. The bank was saved by taking advantage of the thirty and ninety day notification clause in the savings department, and 2,000 persons failed to get their money. Other withdrawals amounted to only $30,000, and at noon the run practically was over.

There also was a slight run on the Milwaukee Trust company, but it soon ended.

Two thousand people were lined up, four and five in a row, waiting for the First National bank to open. They began coming at 5 o'clock, and stood in line until 10 o'clock, before the doors were swung apart. More than 100 policemen were required to keep the sidewalk clear, but the depositors were orderly. They were all persons from the humbler walks of life.

When the doors finally opened a big rush was made by the depositors, and the policemen in their clubs to force them back. As fast as the depositors got to the teller's windows their books were stamped with withdrawal certificates. Those who had less than $100 were notified they could not have their money for thirty days, and those who had over $100 were notified of the ninety day limit. There was much disappointment, but no bad talk.

Take Money Into Bank. One feature which did much to put an end to the run was the spectacular appearance of Mayor Rose and Chief of Police Janssen with large bundles of currency.

"Make way for us; we have $2,000,000," said Mayor Rose. He carried large bundles of greenbacks in his arms $750,000 he said. Back of him came Janssen with a still larger load. The general bank clerks similarly burdened. A detail of armed city police money, which was brought across the street from the Wisconsin bank. It was said that most of the money was furnished by the city and business men, but several hundred thousand dollars came from Chicago.

As soon as it became evident that the crisis was over, the three Chicago bankers, Janssen, Smith and Hamill, started for home.

The expected run on other institutions did not occur. An unusual number of withdrawals were made from the Germania bank, but an institution patronized by the poorer class of people, but the officials said no trouble was apprehended and they could pay all claims.

Former Friend Is Spurned. Some excitement was created by a report that the National Electric company was in trouble. This is a heavily capitalized institution of which Frank S. Bigelow is vice president. Prompt measures were taken to allay apprehension. The directors were called together and went over the books. After the run had been examined Attorney Charles Charles said: "We have made a trial balance and it shows a large surplus."

Asked if Mr. Bigelow would continue as president, Mr. Charles said his resignation from the directors was under consideration.

Bigelow, who has had a finger in nearly every financial scandal in Milwaukee, is being dropped by every farmer on which he served as director. At a meeting of the directors of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company, he was dropped from the directors.

Bigelow also was asked to resign from the directors of the Milwaukee Press company.

Printed notices were posted on the windows of the Milwaukee Trust company saying Frank G. Bigelow no longer was a director of that company.

Bookkeeper Bird Is in Hiding. James Bird, a bookkeeper, whose tip enabled the directors of the bank to discover the $140,000 default, is being sought by the directors. His whereabouts otherwise might not be available when the Bigelow case comes up before the federal grand jury in May.

Bird could not be located at his home, 26 Thirtieth street, though it is known that he gave evidence to National Bank Examiner Charles H. Ewerth. Mr. Ewerth would not say whether his report concerning the manner of Bigelow's operations as revealed by Bird.

Bird's evidence, supported by that of another bookkeeper, whose name has not been named, is expected to convict Bigelow of violating the national banking laws, the penalty for which is from five to ten years imprisonment. One of the directors said of Bird:

"We need his evidence." President J. W. P. Lombard of the National Exchange bank, and also president of the Milwaukee Electric company, admitted that Bigelow and Goll had been assisted by a bookkeeper, but would not give the latter's name.

Detection Inevitable. "The man simply did as he was told," said Mr. Lombard, "and I don't believe he can be held responsible. All the transactions were disclosed in the larger accounts of the banks of outside cities."

"They eventually would have been discovered," said Mr. Lombard, "but better than any else. It would have been some time before they would have been discovered, however, had the collusion between Mr. Bigelow and his bookkeeper been complete. We satisfied ourselves that there was such collusion, the entries being concealed through the aid of Assistant Cashier Bird and one of the bookkeepers or the tellers. It was expected the bookkeepers, of course the bookkeeper tried implicitly upon what President Bigelow told him to do, and this made it possible for the entries to be made on the books."

ANOTHER RECORD IN LAND HUNTING. This Spring's Exodus to Canada Greater Than Ever. It was thought in 1903, when over forty-five thousand people went from the United States to Canada, that the limit of the yearly immigration to the wheat zone of the Continent had been reached. But when in 1904 about 50,000 more people crossed the border, the general public were prepared for the announcement of large numbers in 1905. No surprise therefore will be caused when it is made known that predictions of fully fifty thousand more in 1905 are warranted in the fact that the Spring movement in Canada is greater than it has ever been.
