

All America Stands For Peace. It may be a mere coincidence or it may be a fact of profound importance that the twenty nations which are included in the term Latin-America have been practically free from revolutions throughout the present year.

Central today is unique among South American despots. His political condition is a form of a type that has passed away. It is probable that the example of Mexico has exerted wide influence among her neighbors on the south.

It should be borne in mind by those who are always ready to pass criticisms on South American affairs that the nations which had at their disposal the means of improving their conditions have by a chain of exceptional circumstances, it has been given to the United States to grant by. Civilization was not carried from Spain to South America, as to a certain extent it may be said that it was transferred from an European country to the United States.

The South American countries did not have the same happy chances. The greed for gold and the race for El Dorado were the main inducements of the Spaniards who at the peril of their lives crossed the ocean in eight vessels in a small period after the gold and other precious property of the Indians. The Spaniards conquered did not take the natives, outside of religion, any of the practical methods of life, or rather, those considered practical in those days.

Cleaning Up The Tramps. One of the latest measures for abolishing the tramp nuisance is that of compelling cleanliness by law in the lairs which harbor this class. Since the government assumes the right to clean up districts which breed pestilence, it can justly go a step further and regulate the conditions of those wanderers who might distribute disease.

John D. Rockefeller's recent epigram. "The only way to be temperate is to keep away from drink altogether," in point of lucidity and forcefulness of style may be compared only with his subsequent declaration that "the great majority of drunkards are men who take a social glass once in a great while." Of course it is perfectly obvious to the average American citizen that Mr. Rockefeller means well to the temperance cause, and it is not likely that these stylish utterances will do it any great and permanent injury, but there is no longer any doubt that while he has shown himself to be a very successful dealer in petroleum he has not obtained a corresponding grasp on English "as she is spoke."

The real tramp hates soap and water as much as he hates work. Even if he should beg or steal the price of a lodging in a decent house he will prefer to drink it up rather than subject himself to the rules requiring a daily bath and a clean nightshirt at his own expense. If nothing better comes of this method of dealing with hoboes the honest ones will be separated from the vagabonds, thus checking the spread of demoralization.

Not a Parallel Case. According to James Bryce, member of parliament and author of 'The American Commonwealth' whose opinion on almost any subject is worthy of consideration, the reasons which impel Great Britain to maintain a navy equal to that of any other two powers do not exist with respect to the United States.

Great Britain obtains her food from abroad, and that necessitates the maintenance of the largest merchant fleet in the world. The United States produces almost everything it consumes, and its merchant marine is comparatively insignificant. Without a great fleet Great Britain would be open to invasion of a kind which her comparatively small land force could not resist.

Mr. Bryce is equally skeptical as to the necessity of a great American navy in order to enforce the Monroe doctrine. His chief argument is to be found in the fact that all European nations have come to the conclusion that any attempt to acquire territory in the western hemisphere is chimerical. In reply to the insistence that a great navy must be kept ready to defend Spain's insular possessions Mr. Bryce declares that no power could make such an attack with a good prospect of ultimate success.

Catering to Appetite. The common notion that whatever the appetite desires is the proper food for the system is attacked in the latter Century by R. H. Chittenden whose theory is economy in food. He says:

The so called cravings of appetite are purely the result of habit. A habit once acquired and persistently followed makes us in its grasp, and then any deviation from it temporarily disturbs our physiological equilibrium. The system makes complaint, and we experience a craving. It may be, for that to which the body has become accustomed, even though this something be in the long run distinctly injurious to the welfare of the individual. There has thus come about a sentiment that the cravings of the appetite for food are to be regarded as sacred, that this is necessary to obedience to nature's laws. This idea, however, is fundamentally wrong.

Economy in food, this writer says, does not imply prohibition, but simply means temperance in diet. The meat diet is that which suffices to maintain weight, health, strength, vigor and endurance.

The Boers May Fight Again. The latest information from South Africa indicates that another conflict may not be far off between Briton and Boer. There are two hostile parties active agitation, and the Boer element lifts up the warning. "Beware of dark days ahead." The Britons expect a repetition of the uprising of 1881, when the Boers won their independence, but on a much grander scale.

England seems to be about the only European power which has not had misgivings over the possibility of Japan closing the open door in Korea and Manchuria. As matters now stand, and in view of the new compact which has been made between these two nations, it is not unlikely that England's only fear is that the door will not be closed with sufficient speed and security.
