Matiens of the World Likely to Rest for Some Time.

We are optimist enough to believe, as even the presimist hope, that an era of peace is at hand. Some, indeed, contend that its advent would be assured by some international agreement to reduce armaments. There seems, however, far stronger ground for holding that mischief would arise out of an international discussion on the subject than for expecting that it would hasten the millennium. The strong man armed is the trustlest custodian of peace. It is not the best polled district that is the most exposed to the enterprises of the burglar. The growing cost-liness of war in blood and treasure is the strongest guarantee against reck. liness of war in blood and treasure is the strongest pursantes against reci-bes recourse to it by any power that is not absolutely desperate. Under modera conditions the victor must be prepared to contemplate years of straitened means and painful sacri-dees: bankruptey and ruin are the probable penalties of the vanquished. The progress of selence is doing as much as the advancement of morality to convince mankind of the hopeless wickedness of any war which is not undertaken in defense of national homor of national existence.—London Telegraph.

Delights of Fall Days.

Given health and the physical capacity for appreciation of this season, and man feels the joy of living in its fullest extent. Mere existence is exuberant. Its delights are the right and the possession of the poorest as well as the richest. There is no phitocracy in nature. Wealth cannot buy the Joys which the humblest may gather for themselves. And the inspiration for the future which comes with this season is universal. It is the time of new endeavor for new enterprises. The rigor which springs that the product of the period makes for great accomplishment. The harvest of the fletch as been gath early of the for humanity it is the sectime of action—Boston Post.

Cupid Comes.

Cupid Comes is an alphabetical game, played by any number of persons, each of whom tells how Cupid Comes, in answer to a question. The answers must begin with the letters of the alphabet in order, and must all states of the alphabet in critical comes. The neighbor asks: "How does he come?" and the first player replies, for instance. "Angling." The second player then says to the third: "Cupid Comes." and in answer to the same question replies "Boiling." Bo the game goes on, until the alphabet is exhausted. Sometimes it is then repeated them is said to come amably, bracely, cautionaly, etc. Sometimes the letter A is used by all the players in the first round, B in the second round, and so on. The game thus lasts longer. In this case any one who gives an answer already given must pay a forfelt.

Evil Effects of Egotism.

Evil Effects of Egotism.

One of the greatest evils of the American character is its intense egotism. We take it for granted that we are better people than everybody else, always do the right thing and can not learn anything from any one. A natural result of this national trait is that we make some very serious mistakes, not merely in our dealings with other people, but in our efforts to develop our foreign trade. In our efforts to dominate the trade of South America we have endeavored to make our customers take such goods as we considered they should take and we have have had the mortification that we have had the mortification to see the bulk of the South American trade go elsewhere.—New Orleans Picayune.
