

Black = Belle

"Oh, it's you, you wretched little thing! No, go away, Black-Belle! I won't have anything to do with you. You were all your doing. You know it was. And the pretty brown head was again buried deeply in the cushions, and the hammock shook with the girl's convulsive sobs.

The little black calf eyed her mistress in wide-eyed wonder, then nosed the hammock gently. Whatever had been the matter these last three days? She could not imagine.

The girl suddenly sat up and tossed her hair from her tear reddened eyes.

"Yes, you wretched little creature, it was all your doing right through! Your frightening Dick's horses and our quarreling over it and going on and on; then my saying I'd just go and marry Sam West; his asking father, and father saying yes, and then saying I'd have to, when I wanted to back out! Oh, how Sam agreed, but he wouldn't! It's just horrible! And I hate him! Oh, 'Uncle Sammy'! Why, folks would be calling me 'Aunt West'! And me only twenty-three! They'd do it for spite. Oh—

"And when I love Dick so much. Oh, if mother were only living!

"But there's father at the gate. I suppose I'll have to cheer up and smile and be bright, and everything, or he'll be angry.

"Why, what's the matter? There's something wrong with him?"

"There was something wrong. On his way from town a sudden and unexpected gust of wind had enveloped Sheriff Bark in dust, filling his eyes, and he was scarcely able to see, and for half an hour Milly forgot all ornami- mery in attending her father. When she had done all she could to ease his inflamed and smarting eyes, she hand- aged them and led him to the big chair in the dining room, where he sank back, still suffering considerable pain and much out of temper.

Meantime Black-Belle had tired of searching the long grass of the orchard for wildralls and had sought the fence, to ponder enviously on the freedom of the dusty road beyond. Suddenly, as acting on a thought, she turned and trotted briskly back about the house and down the lane toward the road.

The lane gate was closed!

Indignantly Black-Belle butted hard against it, shoved sideways against it, backed against it, but all to no purpose. Thrusting her head between the bars, she sought to raise it, after the manner of Hanson, but fruitlessly. She spied the big iron latch. Poking her nose beneath it, she lifted it. It fell back in its place. With a toss of resentment she raised it again. There, disappointed and cross, she turned about and strolled toward the house. She must be satisfied with other amusement.

"Milly," called the sheriff, "do you see Sam West coming up the road?"

"No, dad," replied Milly from the kitchen.

"Keep a lookout for him. John said he'd get him talker over to local option all right today, and send him over to sign the petition.

"Ah, this is him," he added ungrammatically a moment later, catching the click of the gate latch and footsteps on the path. The footsteps paused before the open door.

"Good evening, Sam," said the sheriff affably.

The answer was a sharp sniff.

The sheriff's prospective non-in-law was an exceedingly eccentric man, with a hundred odd tricks of speech and manner, even of silence, which were of peculiar significance to those who knew him, and in that contemptuous snort Sheriff Bark read as unlooked for but certain opposition to a course he had ardently taken to heart. His already ruffled temper gave way, and throwing himself back in the chair, he exclaimed warmly and bitterly:

"Well, you know what I know—every stupid, pigheaded word of it!"

"But," again turning his blinded eyes toward the door, "can't you never talk the an' ordinary mortal, Sam West? That's just the way you talk, polities. I got you covered on 10 to 1, you snuff; I get you in the face, and the neck, you snuff; I down you on trust, you snuff. Bah!"

The caller sniffed again. The sheriff turned from him in supreme disgust. There was a low cough, and the chair beside the door moved slightly.

"Oh, yes, come in and have a seat," exclaimed the sheriff, apologetically.

The chair moved again.

"Oh, there's something on it, is there? You see, I can't see. I got my eyes full of dust today."

Hating his voice, he called, "Milly, come and give Mr. West a chair."

The kitchen door opened. There was an exclamation, a momentary silence, then a wild scream of girlish laughter. Simultaneously there was a clatter and clanging at the door, a frightened bawl, and, tearing the bandage from his eyes, the sheriff saw the flourishing heels of a disappearing calf.

Milly laughed until she dropped weakly into a chair, while her father, from sheer inadequacy of anger equal to the occasion, sank limply back and snuffed foolishly.

But he vowed he would be revenged on the meddling animal. When Milly left the room he secured a small stick of wood from the wood box, and, having traced the mischievous back toward the doorway until he felt sure of being able to strike the calf without turning about the chair and before she would have time to withdraw, he settled back and waited.

A few minutes later, with a glow of satisfaction, he heard her again clicking up the walk. With a grim smile he took one more look toward the door, measured the distance with his eye, again gauged the movement of his arm and leaned back in his former position.

The animal reached the door, halted a moment, and before she could recover power of speech he spun about and ran from the room, only pausing on the doorstep to shout back: "I come up and heard what you said a minute ago, when you thought it was I. I thought I must 'a' made a mistake and come back! And this ends it! I'll never marry your girl as long as I live!"

And Sam kept his word. He will probably continue to keep it, for within three months Milly and Dick were married.

And thus Black-Belle repaired her wrongdoing.

The Canary Bird.

About 350 years ago, a ship, returning from the islands of the Atlantic, where people then called the Fortunate Isles, but which were undoubtedly the Canaries, went ashore on the coast of Italy near Leghorn. A case of beautiful birds captured in those islands was broken and the birds were liberated. Through some caprice they did not take refuge on the mainland, but went to the island of Elba, where a station they nested and bred and increased in number. The Italians discovered that they were admirable singers and began to capture them and sell them in the market. As they were so tame, which was completely cleared the island of Elba of "canary birds," so that not one was left there in a wild state. From that time the history of the canary has been a record of perpetual imprisonment and transformation of its appearance and character. In their natural state, as they still exist in the Canary and Madeira and other Atlantic islands, the birds are of a grayish green or greenish brown color and are not remarkable for beauty, but they have been known to burst the membrane of their throats in pouring forth their songs.

The God of Fortune.

The Chinese deity of fortune is always represented as a jolly god, and the rich, who offer him gifts, and the poor, who speak testimonies to his popularity. On the 21st of the second month a special festival is held in his honor, on which occasion his temples are crowded with worshippers, who manifest a devoutness which is strange to the less material deities.

Facts of fat things are greedily presented to secure his favor, and not content with leaving the lots on the knees of the god, his practical minded worshippers seek to lift the veil which conceals his counsels from mankind. For this purpose they adopt a curious device.

In some open space or market square a large wooden cannon barrel with a small charge of powder and a circular rattan sail is fixed perpendicularly into the air. As the wind descends the surrounding crowd struggle to catch it. In the belief that the man who is successful will enjoy the blessings of peace and plenty during the ensuing year.

All of the weather prophets who have spoken thus far have predicted a long, cold winter ahead. Those who have not sized it up are considerably holding their tongues to allow the weather a free hand in the business.

There is $742,000,000 in gold in the treasury at Washington, which means $10 for each and every one of us. But we must not all call for our share at once or Uncle Sam's bank will go broke.

"Thank the Lord," cried Hannah Plant, of Little Rock, Ark., "for the relief I got from Luce's Arnica Salve. It cured my fearful running sores, which nothing else would heal, and from which I had suffered for 5 years." It is a marvelous healer for cuts, burns and wounds. Rewards For Heroes.

Ten new names have been added to the roll of heroes established by the Carnegie hero fund commission. All of the ten, selected out of fifty candidates, had risked their own lives in order to save or to attempt to save the imperiled lives of others. In three cases out of the ten a money award was given, the remaining heroes receiving medals.

It is interesting to compare the principle of this fund with that of a fund established years ago by a French manufacturer. The French awards usually go to men and women who are surprised and astonished to learn that there is anything unusual and heroic in their life or character. Priests and nurses who work among humble folk, widows and orphan girls whose lives are given in patient and self sacrificing toil for helpless dependents and who live uncomplainingly in honorable poverty—in a word, persons whose obscure deeds are done out of the world's eye—are rewarded for the excellence and beauty of their characters. Heroism is indeed virtuous and virtue in some situations is heroic.

"Oscar," the head waiter at the Waldorf-Astoria, says that one meal a day is enough for the average man. With coffee 25 cents a cup, as it is at that hotel, and other things in proportion, a square meal day is all the average purse can stand, however it may be with the lunner man.

The long distance wireless system in use between St. Michael's and Nome, Alaska, fills the bill and is the only long distance wireless in regular use in the whole world. In connecting isolated places like these two far northern towns the wireless is invaluable.

Traces of gold have been found in sea water from the Atlantic by a process of extraction recently perfected in Belgium. Waters of the Mediterranean and the British channel, however, yield no gold by this process.

The International Live Stock Exposition to be held in Chicago Dec. 2 to 9.

"The International Live Stock Exposition is the index of the progress of animal breeding in this country. Here are annually exhibited the best products of the mind and genius of the American breeder, concepts which have been developing during 20, and in some cases even 30 or 40 years. What a privilege it is to come in contact with these men; what an inspiration to study the results of their consistent and united effort. It is no wonder that the ranks of the agricultural colleges far and near, with their instructors, flock to Chicago during the Exposition. We are sure they could they hope to find a school exemplifying as this does all the principles of animal breeding and nutrition. Yes, the International Live Stock Exposition is indeed a great school. Think of what it means to the hundreds of thousands of farmers who annually visit it and see what their better farmers and stockmen think of it. Many a young man has gotten his first true conception of what animal breeding and production means through a visit to the Exposition. So, too, it has become a great vitalizing and inspiring force to the live stock men of the whole country."
