BEAUTY IN THE YARD

How Back Premises May Be

There is a progressive little town in Indiana that has been greatly im-proved during the past three years by the work of its woman's improvement association. Each week this society holds a meeting at some member's res-idence, and plans are discussed for the betterment of the town. Just now there is a crusade against back yards that are not appropriate the core for any idence, and plans are discussed for the betterment of the town. Just now there is a crusade against back yards that are not properly carel for, and this is a matter that every society working for fown improvement should take up. At a meeting of the Italiana association recently a speaker offered some suggestions for the improvement of back yards that should be of value to other communities. She sald:

"So far we have accomplished wonders, but we must make our citizens realize more fully that they must all bear a hand in the work of town betterment, especially giving more attention to home adornment. It is an easy matter to beautify a street if all the residents would take a little interest in the work. In many places shrubs and vines may be placed in courtyprist; bare walls may be covered with creeping vines, flowers and foliage plants in this town are well cared for since our agitation of the matter last year, the fact hat there is no better or cleaner town to locate in than ours, then use what to impress visitors with the fact that there is no better or cleaner town to wake up and insist that the citizenshear a hand in this matter. Most back yards are used as a convenient place for storing refuse. The ownershear hand in this matter. Most back yards are used as a convenient place for storing refuse.
