The Stormy Gulf.

The gulf of Mexico is a water of storms, not frequent, but frequently violent. It is, in effect, an immense scallop cut from the land and hurricanes seem to gravitate to it naturally. They are born in the neighborhood of the Sargassos sea, strike the West Indies and not infrequently leave those islands at a tangent, just as a ball thrown at an oblique angle against a wall slides along it for a little space and again seeks vacancy. These erratic forces of the air strike the coast of Mexico or the coast of Texas, according to their angle, and death is in their track. The things called "tidal waves" in that section are not really tidal waves. They are caused by an upheaval. They are merely local in effect. They are not vast walls of water moving with resistless speed and weight over the ocean. They are waters banked up against a low coast by wind pressure until they overflow. In many instances the submerged is gradual and simple and a family for escape is given. Other times the violence of the air makes them sudden, and people are drowned. St. Louis (Times Democrat).

Pa's Prayers.

Once upon a time sickness came to the family of the poorly paid pastor of a country church. It was winter, and the pastor was in financial straits. A number of his flock decided to meet at his house and offer prayers for the speedy recovery of the sick ones and for material blessings upon the pastor's family. While one of the deacons was offering a fervent prayer for blessing upon the pastor's household there was a loud knock at the door. When the door was opened a stout farmer boy was seen wrapped up comfortably.

"What do you want, boy?" asked one of the elders. "I've brought pa's prayers," replied the boy. "Brought pa's prayers? What do you mean?" "Yep, brought his prayers, an' they're good for the wagon. Just help me an' we'll get 'em in."

Investigation disclosed the fact that "pa's prayers" consisted of potatoes, soup, bacon, cornmeal, turkeys, apples, warm clothing and a lot of jelly for the sick ones. The prayer meeting adjourned in short order.—Youth's Companion.

Quicker—But why are you fellows so anxious to have that writer of fiction join your flock? He doesn't smoke, drink or play poker! Anybody, but we need a writer of fiction to frame up stories for those who do. He can write a clever yarn that any wife will swallow.—Chicago News.

Tracing a Voice.

It was when scholarly heads were bent low over scientific books and when students were fitting and from classes on all sides of the corridor of the Inland Institute that the silence was broken one day by shrill shouts of "Please let me out! Please let me out! Oh, but it's a nice day! I don't like it in here!"

The startled porter rushed to the museum and looked again to his post. The librarian, outside, took note of such an outrageous breach of the rule of silence which hangs aloft, likewise took a survey to see what man, woman or child—for the voice was young in its quality—could be making such weird noises. No one could be discovered. Then the cries issued forth again, and another search began, and finally a young boy from the engineering department pointed out a blushing old lady who, beneath her skirts, sheltered an enormous parrot cage. She explained that she was moving the bird, had stopped in to get a book and was only mollified when she was told by the librarian that she could not look again without the lawbreaking bird.—Philadelphia Record.

Feminine Friendships.

Few women take the trouble to dissect their friendships. They take them for granted and accept every one as a friend who perks them on the cheek and calls them "dearest." That is why so many of us are very fond of each other. In course, obviously, but in the generality of cases the affection is not very remarkable for its depth or its length of its duration.—London Ladies' Field.

French ignorance of the Bible. As to the utter ignorance of the ordinary Frenchman of the Bible, Mr. Stead gave a curious illustration in his own experience. At the general election of 1905 he published a political pamphlet entitled "The Campaigns of Cain," dedicated to all candidates who approved of the Boer war. A French publisher asked to be allowed to bring this pamphlet out in a French translation in Paris. "But," he said, "you must give me another title. Nobody in France knows who Cain is." On Mr. Stead replying that to some literary friends in Paris they declared the publisher was right. "Are none of the Biblical characters known to this generation of Frenchmen?" Mr. Stead asked. "Not one," was the astonishing reply. "Nobody reads the Bible in France?"—Westminster Gazette.

Bitten by a Spider

Through blood poisoning caused by a bite of a spider, John Washington of Bosqueville, Texas, would have lost his leg, which became a mass of running sores had he not been persuaded to try Bucklen's Arnica Salve. He writes: "The first application relieved, and some hours healed all the sores." Heak every sore. 25c at Barrington Pharmacy.

Expansion and Contraction of Air.

If a hole could be sunk into the air, the air of the earth to a depth of forty-six miles, the gravity of the air which would collect at the bottom would be greater than that of quicksilver on the surface. The same law of expanding and contracting of air could be taken to a height of 4,600 miles it would expand sufficiently to fill a space of 2,000,000 miles in diameter.—New York Telegram.

"Pneumonia's Deadly Work

As seriously affected my right lung," writes Mrs. Fannie Conner, of Rural Route 1, Georgetown, Tenn., "that I coughed continuously night and day and the neighbors' prediction—consumption assumed—instilled in my husband brought home a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, which in my case proved to be the only real cough cure and restorer of weak, sore lungs." When all other remedies utterly fail, you may still win in the battle against lung and throat troubles with New Discovery, the real cure. Guaranteed by Barrington Pharmacy, 5c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Was Richard III. a Jackal-Hide?

Was Richard III. the cowardly ruffian of Shakespeare's play? Sir Clements Markham in "The Life of Richard III." flows in the face of Shakespeare's account of all our schoolboys and shows Richard a fine fellow. He publishes, however, a contemporary portrait of this prince, and if physiognomy goes for anything he was the last man you would like to meet in a dark lane.—Andrew Lang.

His Great Discovery.

By Cecily Allen.

The Pellam twin who wore petticoats studied in superior fashion on the Pellam twin who wore pants.

"If you do I shall punch you black and blue," replied her brother, nearly tearing himself away from Isaacian.

"I would give her anything of the sort, you know," replied the Pellam twin as he jerked on his mitten.

"Nattie is not our nurse. We don't have a nurse any more. She's our sister." Then, stopping short, he added: "And there will be no next time. Cracky, not Nattie be tickled when I tell her you thought she was our nurse!"

Douglas Raymond sighed as the door closed on the twins. Then he crossed the room and stood looking down in the window for this he had taken high college honors!

He had just missed a small college professorship through lack of Latin, and with his mother dependent upon him he had not dared to refuse the liberal financial offer of the master of Morris Manor, a flourishing private school overlooking the Hudson. Even that offer had not come until midday, after death had caused a vacancy on the Morris Manor staff and when Douglas had almost decided to give up his college ambitions and ditto commerce.

Morris Manor was a boarding school for boys, with a few day pupils drawn from the rich corners of country houses thereabouts. Just across the tree-lined driveway stood the school for girls. Evidently from this school had come the small sister of his rebellious pupil. He leaned over the window ledge and looked into the room across the street from the school for girls. Raymond began to pace the floor.

"Nattie is not our nurse. We don't have a nurse any more. She's our sister." Then, stopping short, he added: "And there will be no next time. Cracky, not Nattie be tickled when I tell her you thought she was our nurse!"

In the dark case. "Douglas Raymond leaned forward and looked into her eyes. There was no light in the answering glance. "When your father failed—when you were in trouble, why did you never write? You must have known—that the altered circumstances broke down the one barrier between us."

"It was absurd, you might think that all that sort of thing had made any difference to me. It hadn't, you know. Why, you would not speak?" "Oh, and you said that it was not nice to let boys kiss her, and you're doing it."

"I am not doing business daily." "Best tonic medicine on earth. Guaranteed by Barrington Pharmacy, 5c.

Doing Business Again.

"When my friends thought I was about to take leave of this world, on account of indigestion, nervousness and general debility," writes A. A. Chisholm, Tracadieu, N. Y., "and when it looked as if there was no hope left, I was persuaded to try Electric Bites, and I rejoice to say that they are curing me. I am now doing business as usual, and am still gaining daily." "Best tonic medicine on earth. Guaranteed by Barrington Pharmacy, 5c.

The Price of Health.

"The price of health in a malarious district is just 25 cents the cost of a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills," writes Ella Stanton, of Noland, Ark. New Life Pills cleanse gently and impart new life and vigor to the system. 25c. Satisfaction guaranteed at Barrington Pharmacy.

He tried to correct the copy books, but his thoughts would wander. Why was she here? Why had she not carried out her original intention of going abroad to study art? And, if she was not studying, what was the Pellam family doing at their country place in midwinter, with the social season in full swing in the city? He might have known that Willie was her brother. Her odd, demure way of saying startling things had first attracted his attention to her and finally nearly wrecked his last year in college. How could he work then, with the thought that her and the girl who was all in the world to him were alike beyond his reach? There was his future to serve, his mother to support, a few of his father's debts to pay, and on the other side Nattie Pellam, the Pellam wealth, the Pellam position, she had been dining with him, of course, not wilfully, but just because it came as naturally to her as eating and drinking. She had never taken him seriously, which, after all, she never should, when he had gone out west to teach in a summer school and give his mother a little rest in a quiet summer resort, he had thought of her life just as if there had never been twigs in the "fruit" room, moonlight walks on the ramparts, football games and promenade, which, after all, she never had in common. And here she was again, just when he had decided to hold himself well in hand. One thing he must not do, and that was disturbing peace, her magnetic charm, if he possibly could.

Thereafter, if possible, the other one he explained to himself, he showed no partiality to the Pellam twin. In fact, that youth, if he had not been so perfectly ignorant of his own mischievous surroundings, might have complained of discrimination. But every afternoon Raymond stood at the window and watched the slender figure with its two small cheeks hurry through the city streets. She must have changed, he argued to himself. Certainly she had settled down, for she could not be doing the extra, long and arduous work of carrying their children every afternoon.

And then came the day of the blizzard. Raymond watched it shut down on the streets. Man and woman hurried away from the window. Was she coming for those children on foot? By the way, it was odd that she never came with a check or carriage. Other children were claimed by far sadder folk or strong older brothers. Nearly all the dry pupils were gone. "Nattie Pellam had not even tried to come across the street from the school for girls. Raymond began to pace the floor.

"The you think your sister has forgotten or is afraid to come out! Don't you think you had better go home with Wilford Bailey when his mother sends for him?" "Nattie will be here all right. She's probably fussing with Patty's rubbers. Nattie is not afraid of any thing."

Ten minutes later she staggered down the street, and Raymond dashed down the door and drew her into the room. He saw her through the door and saw her through the door and saw her through the door. He saw her through the door and saw her through the door and saw her through the door.

An hour passed before the storm was over, and then they sat facing each other in Mrs. Morris' small sitting room. An awkward silence fell between them.

"I do not do worry any more," he said finally. "I caught your house on the phone just before the wires went down, and so you're worried. The Douglas had not had time to become familiar with his roll book. The wise thing being little, that she was so astonishingly rebellious things in such a precise way he had known to him during that school day only at "While" and he had only known, used certainly he would not have detected the boy and let her stand out in the cold. What if she did have been—"
