Chained Skeletons.
One of the most interesting episodes of the Greek revolution in 1825 is of a certain cavalry officer who surprised a detachment of Turks, routed them and captured their 20,000 sheep. Upon this a Turkish general marched over to them with 2,000 men and recaptured the sheep. The general posted his men behind low earthworks. One redoubt of these opponents was held by a young captain with 100 picked men, who tied their legs together and swore to hold the spot or die. They all fell of their pikes, but did, who died, and long afterward a row of skeletons could be seen bleaching their bones, which were bound loosely together with shreds of grass.

The invention of the art of spinning was ascribed by the ancients to Minerva, the goddess of wisdom. The date 1250 B. C. is given as that of the beginning of the art in Greece, under the direction of the king of Aegaea, but pictured inscriptions on Egyptian monuments show that the use of the spindle and distaff was known in that country much earlier. The first distaff was simply a stick, around which the fiber to be spun was loosely wound, held in the left hand; the spindle was a sort of top set in motion by a twist of the hand, the fiber passing between the finger and thumb of the right hand. This invention was improved upon in the course of time by placing the spindle in a frame and making it revolve by mechanical action of the hand or foot in combination with a wheel or treadle, thus giving the true spinning wheel. The first recorded use of the latter was in the early years of the sixteenth century, but it was probably made and used long before this. The first spinning jenny, a machine working eight spindles, was invented in 1767.

Mermaids and Mermen.
Not many generations ago mermaids and mermen were believed in implicitly. Says the Aberdeen Almanac of Nautical Notices, for the Year 1858: "To conclude for the year 1858. Near the place where the famous Des Barres his trireme to the German ocean, if anyone observers of sound, full things in nature will be pleased thither to resort the 1, 13 and 29 of May and in divers other times in the equinoctial summer, as also in the winter, to the 7 and 14 October, they will undoubtedly see a pretty company of mermaids, creatures of admirable beauty and likewise bear their charming sweet melodious voices."
"In waltz and measures and harmonies of the sea."
Exult the maker and his bonny prize. That smile bright men in company. In quiet peace may live, did save the king!"

Heaving the Log.
Heaving the log is one of those picturesque sea diversions with which all landmen are acquainted, though probably few could explain the exact process. The "log" is a quadrant shaped piece of wood loaded with lead at the curve. The line to which it is attached is 120 fathoms long and is divided by knots into equal distances of forty-seven feet each. These distances are the same fraction of a nautical mile to knot as twenty-eight seconds is of one hour. Consequently the number of knots that slip off the reel in twenty-eight seconds after the "log" is in the water is the speed per hour that the ship is making.—St. James' Gazette.

Retrospective.
Extracts from Miss Evergreen's diary:
"This is my eighth birthday. A new brother came. His name will be Fritz."
"Fritz is twenty years old today, just a year younger than I. People always take me for Fritz's sister."
"Fritz will be thirty years old tomorrow, his wedding day. How the time does fly! Of course he is eight years my senior and used to carry me about when I was a baby—still it seems strange to think of the boy getting married!"—Plebeian Blatter.

The Last of the Plagues.
One of the plagues of Egypt are being abolished by science. The frogs were abolished long ago by the drain pipe. The fleas are checked by insect powder, and the darkness that used to be felt in a cellar or a room at night, the sixth plague still remains in full glory. The fly is always with us. The great Dr. Radcliffe used to declare that the three worst annoyances of life were smoke, flies and irrelevant questions.—Globe's Weekly.
