Use and Abuse of Roads.
Reporters and auto faddists who hang on the fringe of the New York to Paris auto expedition lose no time in telling the public about the mudholes and other tough spots for the machines which have been struck in the spectacular tour across the continent. Some enthusiasts are saying that the trip through the states will be an object lesson for legislators, for the authorities and for the general public on the necessity of expending vast sums for the construction and maintenance of good roads.

Meanwhile another object lesson in this very matter of good roads and automobiles has not escaped the attention of people interested in the maintenance of good roads. It has been demonstrated that auto traffic is rapidly destroying the good roads which communities have created and supported at an expense which is a great local burden. The flying machine injures the roadbed always and never at any time adds to its efficiency, does not weigh, heavy dray, which helps to compress the structure and render the surface firm and in a measure waterproof. The auto sucks up and scatters to the winds that fine gravel and metal lumps that the loaded wagon sets all the harder between and over the dressing of stone. The touring autoist never contributes in the slightest degree to the repair of the roads, which he spoils faster than any other user. If the complaints of the autoists are to be taken in good faith as reasons for putting more money and more labor into the public highways, the local authorities should go to the root of the business and compel the long distance tourist to put up his share of the cost. He will, of course, over give up 50 cents a dollar at the tollgate and then throw away fifty times that amount in a junket at the next town. Since money is so easy with him, let him pay as he goes, road repairs and all.

Rowdy Youngsters.
The mobbing of a New York restaurant by hungry school children whom the proprietor invited to a free feed is not an isolated case of rowdiness in the very young boys and girls of American cities and towns. These children were taken from the street and treated royally by a kind hearted host, and they repaid his kindness by wrecking the restaurant and turning the proprietor that starvation had turned these children into brutes. Otherwise starvation must be the rule among the boys and girls seen in the streets of most all cities and large towns. Their conduct is generally due to the poverty of rowdiness, and but for the presence of police or other guardians of order there would be scenes as scandalous as that in the New York restaurant reported every day.

Children who get far away from home in the streets of large towns and mingle indiscriminately with the crowd and soon lose veneration for their elders and respect for the rights of any one upon whom they think it is safe to impose. Often older boys and girls and even adults encourage rowdiness in the young as an evidence of spirit. Perhaps the enforced restraint of the schoolroom has something to do with these too frequent outbreaks, an evil by no means confined to the children of the poorer class of homes. In fact, the middle class children are the most insolent and uncontrollable, and the nearer they approach to the upper class the worse they are. These latter will respect the rights and decencies of their own homes, but disregard the rights of all outside and thus set a bad example to those beneath them in the social scale.

This is the latest formula for sleeplessness: "Let the person first make himself limp like a cat and relax the body." Check all thought, save this one supreme sentence coursing through the brain, "I am going to sleep." It is harmless at least.

So far not one of the presidential candidates has had a kind word for the wealthy manufacturer, but that harassed individual is still living in hopes.

Orators are all willing to eulogize George Washington. This is one of the advantages possessed by a statesman who no longer stands in anybody's way.

The report that King Leopold of Belgium is insane may be based on the fact that he deliberately passed up a chance to add to his wealth.

One of the great needs of civilization something that will keep expensive clothing and battlehips from going out of style in a single year.

England is thinking of establishing juvenile courts. We are showing the metric system a thing or two.

Railroads and the Law.
It is a common retort of railroad managers when criticized that the roads are ready to obey the laws when the interpretation and meaning are clear. In more all disputes between them and the public they assume the attitude of the innocent and aggrieved party. But it is to be noticed that they sometimes are tardy in trying to get a clear interpretation and also in acting when the issue is put up to them. Almost two years have elapsed since congress ordered interstate commerce roads to get out of the coal business, and now that the period of grace is nearly up, the roads have done nothing except to prepare to dispute the constitutionality of the act and have the matter in doubt when the time limit expires.

A similar disposition to delay action until the last minute and then have the law's operation delayed beyond the time limit has been shown by some roads in the matter of obeying the nine hour law. In the interests of public safety congress made the law effective, and now that the period of grace is nearly up, the roads have done nothing except to prepare to dispute the constitutionality of the act and have the matter in doubt when the time limit expires.

A Crisis in the White Plague.
Patient investigations by Great Britain's medical inspectors show a marked decrease in very recent years of the number of deaths from tuberculosis. The decrease has been steady, and it is believed that the dread disease can be practically conquered in time, the same as leprosy and typhus fever. That result will be a boon to the human world as well as to the human form divine. The bare thought that an uncommunicable malady is slowly eating away human life is appalling, and the belief that consumption is incurable worries thousands who justly grieve who think it will be cured if they would but believe.

It is the opinion of science that no mysterious agent devised by man can account for the lessening of the ravages of consumption. Rather the improvement is ascribed to the lessened violence of the hostile bacillus, combined with increased power of resistance in the average human frame. Men everywhere live better than they did a generation or two ago. Undoubtedly they are indulging in gurgles of friendly microbes to meet the one or half way whenever he appears. More attention to the purity of milk and meat supplies is recommended, and it goes without saying that breath, food and general observance of the principles of hygiene will arrest human tissues against the microbes of this dread disease.

Evidently it is unsafe to reckon upon a painting permanently maintaining its value. There was a time when the late Albert Bierstadt could command his own price for his canvases, but at a recent sale eighteen of his pictures were sold for $7,500, which is painting. These are human beings placed by their owners which could stand the ordeal of an auction sale. They are worth all they are represented to be until some one else is called in to assist in the work of fixing a price.

A sociologist of genius who happened to care about money could probably make a fortune on the stock exchange, where knowledge of humanity is an essential thing. Henrik Ibsen was one of the most successful speculators in Europe.

It appears that Senator Tillman met Mr. Roosevelt in a Pullman car. It may be necessary for a simple man of the people to stick to the road coaches in order to avoid dangerous company.

It must discourage the marketeers to notice that it is never necessary to advertise for a capable man to tackle a king's job after they have created a vacancy.

It would be interesting to know whether the president is keeping up with his simplified spelling lessons as well as the manifold duties of his office.

As yet the New York to Paris automobile excursion doesn't seem to be taking the shine off the progress of the big fleet.

Poverty is only cured by hard work, and too many men regard the remedy as worse than the disease.

Perhaps after all that prosperity ever had been hoodooed by the ceaseless casting over it.

At the Majestic.

Following the engagement of Miss Constance Crawley, the great English actress, at the Majestic theatre, Chicago, the early spring season will be notable by the appearance of many other stars, thus demonstrating anew that without any spur of competition whatever the Majestic management is always inclined to give its patrons full measure. Miss Lucie Lotus, the famous impersonator, is looked for on an early appearance on which occasion she will give for the first time in a Chicago vaudeville theatre her full series of wonderful impersonations, Geza Vicsent's English music hall songs will also appear for the first time in a Chicago vaudeville theatre. Nat M. Willis has also been secured and his admirer will have an opportunity to see him in a playlet containing many laughs. For the week of March 2nd the Boston Fallette and Ladies Orchestra will return to the Majestic where the visits of this band have always been considered an event. The bill will also include McMahons' "Water Melon Girls," the Simon-Gardner company in a funny farce and the four Barck, comedy aerobats. Belle Davis and her Pictanettes coming direct from the Palace theatre, London, will provide something in the way of a new sensation and other specialty acts may be depended upon.

The Jumping Off Place.

"Consumption had me in its grasp; and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery, and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was a well and happy man again," says George Moore, of Grimsland, North Carolina. As a remedy for coughs and colds, and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at Barrington Pharmacy. Trial bottle free.

Basket Social a Success
A very good time was passed by the many people who went to the Y. M. C. A. basket social in the town hall last Saturday night and the association appreciates the patronage of all those, for a sum of $45.50 was realized and was welcome in the work of the society. Mrs. S. J. Fulton's basket sold the highest and was bid in for $4.50. The program given consisted of two readings by Francis Dolan, two duets by Myrtle Plagge and Lydia Sott, a concert solo by Newton Plagge and an exhibition of Indian club swinging to music by Roy Horton, the physical director, with Miss Almada Plagge as pianist.

To Be Continued.
The revival meetings at the Methodist church will be continued during the coming week every evening except Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. The attendance has been good and the meetings are growing in interest. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend.
