Are We Hurrying Our World?

Treating of the prospective working out of the coal supply, the Engineering Record presents some strong arguments to show that we are rapidly burning up those elements of our earth's crust which are our main dependence for heat and for power to drive industrial activities.

Much dearer fuel, and a distress amounting to a calamity and to come in the course of a generation, is the least that the record can predict unless the present rate of coal consumption can be reduced at once to a marked degree.

Somehow Good in Life. The third product of the pen of William De Motenail, the English writer whose gift of story telling was revealed at an advanced age, suggests a reason for the current demand for happy endings to novels and plays.

After all, it is the hope that this is the way of the world in the average heart which gives courage to meet the vicissitudes of fortune and conditions. That things are bound somehow to turn out all right is an inspiring thought, and people who look to the novel and the drama for pictures of nature in its ideal dress do not like to have this cheering tradition disturbed.

Demetrius Thompson is now in his seventy-fifth year. He is deservedly revered in his profession and out of it as a good actor and a good man. His play and his success in it have been the inspiring of countless pure, clean dramas of stunner type.

The hand of an American girl may be better than a throne, but the Italian prince who was credited with "spurning a throne" to wed Senator Ekin's daughter showed only plain horse sense when he preferred the "bird in hand." There are at least six lives now between him and the throne and the royal nursery yet to be heard from.

Saving Waste in the Tree.

Lumbermen have for years been perfecting their machinery so as to reduce the waste in manufacturing lumber. The old-fashioned, vertical, stiff back saws which were operated by water power made a cut almost half an inch wide. Then came the circular saws, which greatly increased the speed of sawing and reduced the waste in kerf.

This condition has been brought about by the ever increasing demand for greater economy and cheaper and quicker methods of manufacture. Waste in lumbering has always been an important consideration, but has become far more so of late on account of the very rapid depletion of the forests.

Reasonable Things. Some people refuse absolutely to bank upon the antics of the groundhog as a weather signal, but no one is so skeptical as to discount the pessimist need not to hope when he cries, "One swallow doesn't make a summer," but there is no discounting the significance of the first flutter of the robin, sparrow and bluebird, especially bluebirds, after the winter has had its triumph to itself.

The United States had up to June 30, 1905, expended nearly $200,000,000 to improve navigation in rivers that have their upper courses in the southern Appalachian mountains. Incidentally, the total expenditure amounted to more than $300,000,000. The projects for improvement authorized by congress on these rivers are not yet complete.

The orange growers of Valencia, Spain, are not making money. According to a recent consular report, farmers have been forced to sell their fruit to pickers as low as 10 cents per twenty-five pounds. The reason assigned for the depression is overproduction, due to excessive cultivation, which has caused the quality to deteriorate, and thus the Valencia orange suffers in competition with the products of other countries.

Even if the Spaniards of 1898 had known all the things the griffes have been telling about our navy it would not have made any difference. Even if Anna Gould should consent to write a book or lecture, American business would go on marrying titles just the same.

"I became a forger because of the hard times," said a prisoner, to which the judge responded, with a smile: "You excuse him. Have to see 'Colonel' Roosevelt about that."

So real and so substantial has been the industrial growth of Germany that the emigration from that country has declined from 200,000 a year to fewer than 20,000 a year within a generation.

With a navy trouble on hand, the British capote grows more and more like his great teacher who rules "my people" on this side of the ocean.

Love not only occupies the higher lobes of the brain, but crowds out the lower to make room for its expansion. —Horace Mann.
