Seeds of Anarchy. Secretary Straus, at the head of the department of commerce and labor, hit the true note recently with regard to the seeds of discontent which breed anarchy...

No doubt many anarchists are destructive by nature. They don't want to build better or they would find abundance of unoccupied room for new structures. Said one of the followers of the red flag in Paris a generation ago...

To Make the Army Over. There seems to be as wide a divergence of opinion as to the kind of army as there is as to the merits of different types of warships. A bill is before congress which, if it should become a law, would turn the ranks of the regular establishment topsy turvy.

The Theater Outlook. The hard times naturally hit the theater the very first, but it is said that the depression may be followed by an improvement in the matter of present stock companies. There is a promise of more stock companies this year than ever before.

Once in awhile that all nice sublimed joke isn't a bit funny—for instance, when a $25,000,000 estate is affected by the birth of a ninth heir that the other heirs stand to lose about $3,000,000 to the new arrival.

It may be admitted without violence to our feelings of pride and patriotism that the United States navy, like everything else in this world, has not reached a point when it cannot be improved upon.

It would probably save off international jars now and then if European monarchs would consent to come over here and pick just the diplomats to suit them and be done with it.

Ulcio Sam's Wild Horse Past. Wild horses by the thousands are overrunning the government national forests and the authorities in Washington are besieged with petitions from stockmen and farmers begging them to put a stop to the nuisance. Every herd is a pest to the owners of vegetation and domestic stock. Neither the forest rangers nor any other employees of the government have been allowed to destroy the horses, and unless they do receive such orders they will continue their energies to fencing crops and the trespassing animals or rounding them up when they appear and threaten damage to the range. Indeed, if half the stories current in the capital are true all the rangers in Uncle Sam's service would have little chance of destroying the big herds that are roaming over the national ranges. Within the last few years they have increased to such an extent that in many localities they are classed as "varmints," with wolves, wildcats and grizzlies, and every man's rifle is turned against them. No fence is strong enough to stop them, and when they appear in force they have even been known to knock down and kill cows and calves. After each visitation from a herd the ranchman is busy to mourn the loss of his domestic horses, and it requires only a few days' association with their companions for the best broken animals to become as wild as their nomadic comrades.

The wild horse problem is only one of the many which stockmen have to contend with which the government is trying in one way or another to solve on the ranges of the national forests. Predatory animals, such as wolves, coyotes, mountain lions and wildcats, do thousands of dollars' worth of damage to stock each year in all parts of the country. On some ranges forest officers have to contend with rustlers, who sometimes succeed in stealing the greater part of the stock which the predatory animals do not kill. Poisonous plants are another nuisance which give the stockmen considerable trouble in many parts of the country. Uncle Sam has always shown a disposition to cooperate with the stockmen in combating these nuisances. In fact, he is doing better than merely meeting the stockmen's half in the work. On many of the national forest ranges for the last year rangers and guards have been assigned to the work of hunting and trapping, with the sole aim of killing off the animals that prey upon stock. The work has met with marked success, and hundreds of wolves and coyotes have succumbed to the bullets and the poison of the hunters. Each animal killed means a decided saving to the sheep industry. It is estimated that one wolf average kills about $1,000 worth of sheep. Forest officers are co-operating with the stock associations to stop the stealing of live stock and run the rustlers out of the country. The war on poisonous plants has been carried on more than ever by the forest service in co-operation with the lumber and plant industry, and while the investigations have just been begun, it is already seen that their growth can be checked in many stages. If it is possible to check the wild horse nuisance as easily as the other troubles, both the stockmen and forest officers will find the ranges rid of another serious drawback which helps to retard progress in the business.

These have been great days for the circus patrons of Chicago, and Ringling's brothers are nightly and daily packing the big circus into buildings. A large percentage of the attendances are out-of-town people from all parts of Illinois and adjoining states. One man has been kept busy laying aside tickets on money-order applications. And the performers have not lacked for excitement. On the opening night the automobile double commercial in mid-air failed to materialize because of the final rehearsal. La Bell Roche was stashed with a corset steel when the heavy car landed on the platform. The act is now going with a terrific success, and is pronounced the greatest of all thrillers.

On Saturday a family of acrobats, a clown, a herd of trained elephants, Prof. Buckley and his dogs and a herd of camels went to the county hospital and gave in costume on the lawn in the still winds a circus performance to the crippled children of Chicago who were unable to attend the Coliseum shows. Last Sunday Corsetta the nudist gave a supper to her companions of the circus ball and invited guests in honor of her nineteenth birthday. She made a speech, standing in the center of the tall. George Ade was one of the speakers. The banquet was held in the menagerie.

So far this has been the most successful season the Ringlings have ever given in Chicago. Special performances are being given for out-of-town visitors at which souvenirs of the twenty-fifth anniversary season of the show are presented to attendees. The engagement closes April 22.

Change of Announcement. Donald Robertson, of the Cosmopolitan School of Dramatic Art, will address the Cook County Teachers Saturday, April 11, at 10:30 a. m. Subject: "The Players' Calling."
