While the cultivation and the preservation of trees belongs to arboriculture and forestry rather than to horticulture, the placing of trees in the lawn so intimately affects its appearance that this branch of tree planting, trimming and care is properly a part of landscape gardening. In Europe trees are trimmed to grow in almost any desired way. It is not meant that they are made to grow in ball and in fantastic and fanciful forms after the fashion into which many of our evergreens were tortured a few years ago, but they are led to assume striking effects that are perfectly in keeping with the natural appearance and yet would not have been produced by nature without assistance.

The cutting and maiming of young reds and other evergreen trees into shapes, wheels and other impossible forms are on a par with setting out flowers in diamonds and other bizarre and unnatural figures. This sort of travesty on both art and nature has about the same relation to real landscape gardening that commercial fakery has to genuine spirituality. These caricatures both in flowers and trees look practically every essential to the best effects. They are not beautiful, they are not artistic, they are not natural and they are not harmonious with any possible general scheme. Real art conceals itself, but pseudo art daunts its artificiality.

Water Defies Sword Cut. Near Gravelly, France, there is a manufactory which in the middle of a dry stream from a reservoir some 1,000 feet up on a mountain. The water comes down by a vertical pipe of this length and somewhat less than an inch in diameter. Sometimes the jet is allowed to escape in an upward direction, and it spurts with such force into the air as to be velocity imparted to it by its previous fall. It is strong man backing at it with a sword cannot drive the weapon through it.

The sword is checked and deflected if it had struck a brick wall. Relatively speaking, the speed at which the water moves is not very great, about 100 yards a second or about one-tenth of the speed of a cannon ball.

Fish Invisible When Asleep. "That fish is asleep," said the attendant. "How do you know?" the visitor to the aquarium asked. "But I can't see him by the way."

"That's his I know. He, like many other fish, changes color on going off to sleep. He is notified with some dark olive green, a handsome, sonorous splash of light object. Asleep, he is a palid gray with fainter wings and tail a bluish gray, practically invisible. Many of the water fish, especially in the tropics, have this ability to change from a bright to a pale, vague hue when they sleep. Thus they sleep safe. Otherwise their similar would end between a bigger fish's jaws."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The street car conductor was about to sit down to breakfast when a messenger boy brought him a telegram announcing that a rich relative had died and that he was the sole heir.

"Easy street" shouted the conductor, reaching up for an imaginary bell rope. —Chicago Tribune.
