The Fight on Little Round Top

Valor of the Twentieth
Maine at Gettysburg.
By FRANK H. SWEET
How Colonel Chamberlain
Won the Medal of Honor.
Copyright, 1908, by Frank H. Sweet.

THIS war council generalizes the fight before the second day's battle of Gettysburg became necessarily a frantic protection of flanking; the unknown. Outside on the long, thin ridge and between the abrupt hillsides, that intricate battle field lay the encampments of the two hostile armies, officers and soldiers. There were few campfires. At times could be heard the roar of a heavy cannon or the drawn out clatter of a battery on the storm ground of the center. Daybreak found cautious General Meade still listening to the reports of his division commanders, to their strengthening the line of battle. The unexpected was certain to befall both officers and men, and they must be ready to perform miracles if need be. An instance of this kind was the fight of the Twentieth Maine on Little Round Top, in token of which the colonel of the regiment, Joshua I. Chamberlain, for his daring heroism received the medal of honor.

It was now afternoon. Lee's attack was expected momentarily, and every man was waiting intently with his eyes fixed upon the open space that stretched before the line. Just at this time, by a fortunate chance, it occurred to General Meade to order General Warren to ride over the field in the direction of the Round Top. Warren did so, and when Chamberlain saw the Little Round Top a body of Union troops had been posted.

Colonel Joshua I. Chamberlain in Civil War Days.

so that only 308 men were left in line. We first fought without seeing the extent of the opposing force, which was constantly increasing. Then the two flanking regiments (Fifteenth and Forty-seventh Alabama) prepared a "turning" attack, were not by a change of front. I sent that flank to strike this attack in flank.

No sooner had Colonel Chamberlain's little force reached the portion of the hillside assigned to it than it was engaged by the Fourth Alabama. It saw a dense mass of Confederates coming toward its left, for two companies of the enemy, containing a thousand men, had been ordered to turn the Union flank exactly that position. Discerning in a flash the grave peril of his command, the Maine colonel sent out a company to engage this force and ordered five companies to swing back until they formed a line at a right angle to the attack. At this instant the Alabamians struck them on front and flank, opening with a murderous fire. There were five successive charges by this force.

Colonel Chamberlain with drawn sword moved up and down the line. The bullets whizzed incessantly past him. His men were constantly groaning and falling. Outnumbered more than three to one, their position was terrible, and it was apparently a hopeless one. Yet with dripping faces the men loaded and fired their muskets, displaying the cool expertness of true veterans.

Colonel Chamberlain thus describes what followed: "Seeing the desperate situation, I had ordered my men to use the cartridges of the fallen, friend or foe. When they had fired their last cartridge into the faces of a rallying force I resolved to make a countercharge with the bayonet and so instructed my officers on the wheeling flank, on whom the brunt was to fall. Returning to my center, I was about to order the movement when Lieutenant Melcher, commanding the most valiant center company, came up and asked if he might not rush forward and rescue some of our wounded before the oncoming enemy should break them underfoot. I admired his tenderness and courage and answered: 'Yes, sir; I will give you a reward. I am about to order a charge. I will reward it to our colors and shout "Bayonet" adding "Forward!" But no mortal could bear this, the roar of all words and of my men drowning out the rest.

"We made a sickle sweep a great right wheel, with our whole line, assaulting the enemy into surrender or wild retreat. I cleared the round top valley between Little Round Top and brought back 400 prisoners. I had lost fifty men on the center and a third of the entire regiment on the left. The company I had sent out on our left not being at first in the charging line, it was made by scarcely more than 200 men. We later advanced in midnight darkness, clambering the rough sides of Great Round Top, beyond which retreated, and with the aid of two regiments held the position."

The heroic leader of this remarkable action, besides receiving the medal of honor for his work at Gettysburg, was made a brigadier general on the field.
