The "House of Governors."

Failure of the individual states to shoulder their share of the nation's legislative responsibility was emphasized by Secretary of State Elihu Root in a speech which attracted much attention a year and a half ago. Control must be lodged somewhere, he declared, and if the states fail to furnish it in due measure the power will somehow be vested in the national government. A letter outlining the difficulties involved could be found in a "house of governors," urged William George Jordan, whose suggestion, set forth in a pamphlet published some four years ago, led to the recent conference of governors at the Villa Horvath. To quote from the pamphlet:

In the congress of the United States the senators, chosen as they are by the state legislatures, nominally represent their states, but not the people of their states, for the latter have no direct voice in their selection. The members of the house of representatives do not represent their states, but simply districts of their states. With ideas to their position and with duties and obligations to them, they enter in theory the interest of their state as an individual citizen. The importance in their hearts, but in fact they never lose sight of the quality of value in the congressional district. The governor of the state, however, elected by the people, keeping his fingers close to the pulse of the people, is the only one who is in constant touch with the people. The voice of the governor, therefore, in the proposed new house means a new direct representation of the people in the affairs of the state and in the national government. It is up to the nation, such as the people have never yet had in the life of the republic.

The "house of governors," Mr. Jordan thinks, should never aspire to law-making power, but find its force, "in initiative, in inspiration and in inducement." As he observes, it must seem to the unbiased mind that forty-six governors with the lawmaking power of forty-six legislatures behind them would in time become an integral part in the American idea of self government and a powerful force for the good of the nation. States may make agreements among themselves and carry them out if congress does not object. Thus the "house of governors" has already a legal, official and constitutional status. The chain between the nation and the individual state is bridged. In a word, the "house of governors" would provide possibly the best available instrument for securing that uniformity in state legislation which is urgently needed in such matters as divorce, child labor, factory inspection and inheritance laws as well as the regulation of interstate commerce.

Emergency Currency.

Congress listened to the general appeal of the country for an emergency currency bill and passed an act which at least furnishes opportunity for experiment. Possibly another emergency currency bill has been prevented, but no sweeping change has been made in the currency. Had there been no trouble about obtaining currency last fall it is probable that the bill would have been passed.

The subject has been under advisement for some years, and a general measure, to include emergency, will doubtless be perfected by the currency commission created at the late session before the emergency act is put to a satisfactory test.

No plan for an elastic currency which shall be entirely free from objectionable features is likely to be found. The German system of providing currency for emergency has proved unsatisfactory after being in operation thirty years. The one element of danger in an emergency currency, that of wild inflation, has been guarded against, it is believed, in the recent act of congress. Inflation will be unobtainable, for issue of currency by the banks will be regulated by the rate of interest prevailing in the market. In effect the new measure lets the currency of the country alone. It may be handy to fall back on some time when there is a serious scarcity of currency.

"The Merry Widow" Message.

Recklessly cavorting in the newspaper pages cultivated by the press agent of the German embassy, "The Merry Widow" share her arrival in America some months ago, has spread the impression that she is not as good as some people seem to think all widows should be. Note, the truth is the other way, and a woman shouldn't be blackballed from good company for a reputation based on counterfeit and forgery. Instead of setting a bad example to the "Merry Widows" flung from the ends of her nimble toes and slips from her bejeweled fingers a message that smacks of all the proprieties and misadventures only by a hair. Even that hat, far from being too much, too wicked or too anything in the undesirable class, is almost an invocation to reverence the way she wears it.

As an opinion "The Merry Widow" combines the wholesomeness of "Hansere" the witchery of "Erminie" and the oriental healthiness of "The Mithila". The role reverses repeat "Erminie" and "Juliet" and "The Lady of Lyons," but is minus the tragic element of the first and of course skips the tragic, complex situations in the career of "Juliet" and "Erminie". The right side of Paris is suggested rather than depicted in its boldness, and that only as a means of showing the widow in the role of a good girl.

Other attractions of the play, which the critic realizes those smiles of innocent merriment from beneath the wonderful hat.

All men, with a single exception, fall in love with the dancer, and all "have the right to their letters". The exception takes no pains, for he has been in love with her as long as he can remember, having made the fatal plea that she is not his.

Other attractions of the play, which the critic realizes those smiles of innocent merriment from beneath the wonderful hat.

Our Warship Armor Under Test.

Facts of great value in naval construction were developed in the recent tests of the effect of shell fire upon a monitor under conditions like those in real warfare. Critics of the armor of which that on the Florida, the target in the test, is a type can have little to say in disparagement when a twelve inch shell, the most destructive now in vogue, was sent smashing against the monitor's turret and failed to dislodge it. The turret showed an indentation of the armor, cracked plates and loosened screws, but it remained workable, and it was proved by a clever device with dummy figures that had the chamber occupied by human beings they would have escaped unharmed.

The test shots upon the military map on the deck of the Florida also proved the efficiency of the new feature of our latest naval architecture. This mast was struck by two four inch shells, and one tremendous shell went through it, but the structure remained intact and serviceable. These tests mark another stage of the incessant conflict between the makers of naval cannon and the armor. It is now incumbent upon the gun and projectile makers to find means to destroy skeleton masts and to smash armor plates, and on the other hand the armor makers have the lead, and if armor is no longer to be classed as "penetrable stuff" there are vastly more dangerous places than a protected turret while under the hottest fire known to naval warfare.

It has occurred to a clever Frenchman that the submarine should not be monopolized by the war, and he has designed a boat to carry down sponge gatherers and pearl fishers who would lay at the bottom of the sea.

One cheerful aeronaut predicted recently that flying machines will be no more dangerous than automobiles when the advantages of the air become apparent in the use of the apparatus. On the very day of this prediction four fatal auto accidents were reported in two cities.

French scientists now investigating the food value of vegetables claim that potatoes are the ideal brain food. Potatoes are plentiful and cheap there seems to be little excuse for anybody having a poorly nourished thinking apparatus.

In order to give his audience some real acting for once, a New York manager has engaged a real cow and a real national and puts them on the stage as well as on the program.

For a few days after buying a straw hat the clerk thinks it easier to remember that an umbrella is a good thing to keep handy.

Since Count Boni de Castellane will save $2,000,000 he is pretty well insured against being forgotten for some years at least.

While many of the accidents which cost the lives of 23,000 American miners in the last seventeen years were unavoidable, perhaps the majority of them could have been prevented. It is to be hoped that the next seventeen year period will fall far below in the sorry record.

The senate ratified no fewer than thirty-seven treaties during the last session of congress, and twelve of them are treaties of arbitration of real and permanent value. The treaties with England and Japan are particularly notable.

How to Abolish Battleships.

While conceding that so long as other first class nations have battleships this country must go ahead with the construction of up to date and costly ones, the Wall Street Journal argues that the battleship can and in the interest of sound economy ought to be abolished. As to the argument on the economic side the journal says:

A modern battleship of the first rank, with full armament and equipment, costs about $10,000,000. With that money one could buy 20,000 bales of cotton. With that money 60,000 women could be employed with fifty dollar spring hats, which have become as much modern luxury as battleships. With that money one could buy 60,000 suits of clothing. With that money one could buy 60,000 suits of clothing. With that money one could buy 60,000 suits of clothing.

The idea that money counts everywhere is not confined to Wall Street. A famous general who was asked what three things he would find most essential for success in war said, "Money, money, money and still more money." Now, says the Journal, the bankers of the world should get together and vote not to finance any more battleships and thus compel the different countries to abolish the costly luxury.

Peary's Arctic Plans.

Explorer Peary is evidently not impressed by the plans of other who think the north pole can be fished or surprised through some trick. While preparing to set out on another voyage in the hope of reaching the goal he lays in supplies for three years, although the programme can be covered in less than half that time with the usual luck and ill luck of explorers.

Peary keeps the confidence of his backers because he persists in the only method which has ever given results in arctic progress—the ship as far as he can go and then dogs and sledges. In this way he has already reached within 200 miles of the pole. With fair luck and favoring weather he expects to go to the same point as the farthest point reached on his last voyage and do it quickly. His ship has been remodeled on plans suggested by experience, and his march northward by Peary knows it will be regarded by the teachings of previous trips. Special precautions will be taken to prevent the separation of the party after the sledge journey begins. In reality, however, the terrors of arctic research and instead of trying to dodge them gets ready for the inevitable battle.

It is hard to resist the conviction that Peary will reach the same point as the farthest point reached on his last voyage and do it quickly. His ship has been remodeled on plans suggested by experience, and his march northward by Peary knows it will be regarded by the teachings of previous trips. Special precautions will be taken to prevent the separation of the party after the sledge journey begins. In reality, however, the terrors of arctic research and instead of trying to dodge them gets ready for the inevitable battle.

Canada and the Undesirables.

Having an immense area to fill with people, it is not surprising that Canada could assimilate a large amount of material in the rough and mold it into citizenship that would be a blessing in the future. Purchasement, it has been broadly proclaimed that the only classes which the Dominion will welcome at the present time are female domestics, farmers with means to acquire and cultivate land and experienced farm laborers. Indiscriminate immigration will be discouraged.

Our monitors do not stand well in the opinion of the naval experts, but they stand gun fire well enough to deserve an all around certificate of merit.

People have a panic whenever some one dies of hydrophobia and yet dirt with tetanus about every minute every Fourth of July.

Army colonels who are too fat to ride must walk fifty miles. Those too fat to walk should be allowed to roll that distance.

In spite of the war on mosquitoes it will be just as well to screen the windows and put up the nets this summer.

A Point in Her Favor.

A Kansas woman sold the family refrigerator last summer in order to procure money with which to purchase a pair of roller skates. Evidently the woman didn't feel safe with wheels in her feet and some on her feet—Washington Herald.

And yet there was method in her assumed madness. People who wear roller skates don't need ice—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Logical Position.

"So you are really in favor of local option?"

"Not local option, sir," rejoined Colonel Stillwell; "prohibition."

"When did you become a convert to such views?"

"Since I joined the Society for the Prevention of Disagreeable Noises, I have found there is nothing like a few drinks to tempt men to think they can sing."—Washington Star.

I can remember when a circus clown was spoken of as a "zany" a word now only found in colored alphabets for children, disinterred from the dictionary to meet the exigencies of the letter Z. This is, I think, a beautiful word. It is of course the soft Venetian form of Giovanni, as SS. Giovanni e Paolo is "Zanipolo" in the speech of the gondoliers—London Outlook.

Miss Surfer—I hope you are feeling better today, Mrs. Tubercle. What does the doctor say? Mrs. Tubercle (faintly)—One of my lungs, he tells me, is entirely gone, and Miss Surface (gleefully)—Oh, how nice! You won't have any more trouble from that, will you?—London Quiver.
