Hazing.
 With the opening of the school season reports from all over the country that college hazing has by no means gone out of business. The upper classes of Amherst even protest against the abolition of hazing on the ground that it does the freshmen good and is really an educational experience. This is virtually the claim made at West Point and one reason why some officials wink at it. It is only fair to the college men to admit that hazing tortures is not confined to schoolboys, but seems to be a universal trait of the human crowd.

The hazing spirit is everywhere. New recruits in the army have to submit to some sort of rough initiation, and the more they "kick" against the programme the rougher it becomes. The dulle from town who strikes the plains undergoes various humiliations which he seems to be a "underdog". Brokers initiate new comers on the floor of the exchange with some form of horse play, and in most all shops and factories the hazing spirit never dies out. If green hands do not come in fast enough to supply victims some weak or friendless workman is imposed upon again and again. Wherever hazing appears it is a relic of barbarism, and it is a pity that authority should be unable to keep it within bounds.

Recruits For Our Consular Service.
 The government has recently taken up the question of training young men for service as United States consuls in foreign towns and cities. The field is enlarging because of the rapid extension of our trade all over the world. The service itself trains but very few beginners.

Recently an attempt was made to ascertain what class of men can best fill the office of consul. The exporters of goods are the persons most interested in having capable consuls to represent this country abroad, and in respect to formal inquiries on the subject those gentlemen advised the appointment of men who had had practical experience. But the men outside of the service who have had such experience in examinations, and the pay of consuls is too small to attract them from commercial pursuits. Apparently the only way is to appoint men who show fitness for consular duties in examinations. A steady demand is certain to bring an army of applicants into the field and to induce greater care in preparation among the candidates.

Denatured Still.
 The expert of the agricultural department, Dr. Wiley, has been demonstrating how to turn farm waste into wood alcohol. The product obtained is not denatured alcohol, although it is used for the same purpose—that is, for fuel and in certain manufacturing arts. It is a species of wood alcohol, and there is talk of utilizing molasses as well as corn and potatoes for its production.

If the small farmer finds a good market for his small potatoes and imperfect corn and melons at the still, one of the evils of farming which impede this new industry—that is, the removal for sale of what grows on the farm instead of feeding it to stock and returning it to the land. Possibly the farmer for fertilizing. But some of the important chemical elements will be lacking. With the profits of the crops also some of the commercial fertilizers may be bought, but however it goes, nature's system of returning vegetable products direct to the soil will be evaded, perhaps to the detriment of the soil.

Bulgaria as a Storm Center.

Among all the Balkan countries Bulgaria seems to be best prepared to do something decisive when the time is ripe for political change. Conditions have improved there since the peace of the Berlin conference thirty years ago placed its destinies in the hands of Turkey. The people want to be free and twenty years ago made a good fight against Turkey. They are strong they lacked the sympathy of a strong European power. A free and independent Bulgaria must, of course, complicate the politics of eastern Europe.

Young King Manuel of Portugal has been voted an allowance of $1,000 a day. If the neighboring crowned heads do not drop in on the folks at the palace too often the boy ought to pull through on that unless he gets the auto spending fund.

With penny postage working, our English papers can afford to write and send you the news in the form of the comic papers and paragraph columns we send over there.

Older's Cooking.

The famous recipe which was offered to housewives to keep the odor of boiling onions and cabbage out of the house for the most part of 41 years ago, has been carried on in the fashionable apartment district of St. Louis. The recipe, which was only handed out after the dollar had crossed the magnitude of the palm was, "Don't boil onions and cabbage." In order to be impartial the owners of the St. Louis apartment house put it "in the lease" that cabbage, onions and other "odoriferous vegetables" shall not be cooked on the premises.

There are cooking odors more or less unpleasant to many people which do not go with the preparation of a boiled dinner—for instance, frying fat that ceases to be sweet or the "burnt" oil of vegetables after the water in the kettle has evaporated. It will be a merry war when landlord and tenant and neighbors who complain come to settle all these fine distinctions and to see who is right in the matter. But with that the world in general has nothing to do. The question is upon the common sense of anybody banishing from the table vegetables that are for health and strength as well as pleasure because nature happened to endow them with a flavor all their own. The question has upon the peace of families and inhibited neighborhoods making pretense of being "fashionable" if the St. Louis landlords persist in enacting a national crusade for idleness cooking they will find allies in every town and village. Fortunately the farm kitchen is the way to one side, and others on the other from the house without killing cabbage and onions off the bill of fare.

Art and Matrimony.
 The domestic troubles of Nat Goodwin and his wife came as a surprise to many who have seen this couple at their best upon the stage. Usually they have appeared in plays which seem to suggest that the romance depicted was not all make believe. Critics and audiences said that the sentiment between the two was too good to last. It lasted fairly well for stage people, and it is not saying that actresses and actresses are abnormally flighty in love affairs.

Soldiers' Marching Tests.
 Our army would show off well in a marching test if the work done by the officers recently is a criterion. Fifty miles in three days is good marching, although not great marching. During the fall maneuvers of the German troops the marching test was twenty miles in one day, and 20 per cent of the men dropped out before the end. This is poor marching, and the French have shown better stuff or better marching, for only 2 per cent fell out on a march of the same length in France.

Teaching People to Save.
 While the opposition of the banking fraternity to government postal banks seems natural as a business policy, it goes against one of the cardinal principles of sound finance. People need to be taught to save and have their money earn more money. The regular savings banks will always pay higher interest than the government postal banks, and must continue to get the spare money of the thrifty having access to their vaults. The postal bank will send the draught into the highways of the land and rather than in dollars that would otherwise be hoarded in holedness of scattered on the first tempting bargain or chance for a good time. If the pennies are saved the dollars will find the right channel to the best repositories for savings in bank.

An expert declares that some European powers could "land an army of 100,000 soldiers on our coast quickly and with few casualties. Yes, and also beat us shedding tears over what happens then."

New York officials declare that the city is "now" practically defreept. They always say that between free.

It's time now to talk of "higher finance," so we'll put it on those who invest in acropoles.

Controlling Wireless Currents.

The aeroplane seems to have sidetracked the new telegraphy as a proposition for the curious to wonder over. Marconi, Edison and other experts, who always get a hearing, are telling us about the prospects of navigating the air instead of prophecying about powerful electrical currents running loose in the air, in the ocean and in the earth which man is to harness with his will. If the wireless current is to be controlled and subordinated to man's uses, the practical mind would prefer to see that developed ahead of the flying machine.

Marconi, the wizard of the wireless up to date, had no startling announcement to make during his recent visit to this country. The wireless is working somewhere all the time with practical certainty, but only on a radius limited to a couple of hundred miles. However, this is at sea, where there could be no communication of the Hertz waves. Mr. Marconi admits the trouble in his system by the variation in the power of transmission due to the state of the weather. For hours on many days and on many mornings and evenings the power is weak and may cease altogether. In this field lie the problems confronting the wireless in the air, and they are more complicated than any which have baffled inventors dealing with currents transmitted by wire.

Blazing History's Trail.
 Within thirty-two years Philadelphia has had two historical festivals during which the most was made of the relics and landmarks of colonial days, and yet during Founders' week strangers who had been there at the centennials of 1876 and 1888 and who had lived there all their lives were heard exclaiming over historic sites and structures recently marked by suitable signs, "Why, I never saw that before!"

About every city in this country and many a town and even remote hamlet has something that should be a stimulus to local pride and to patriotism. People see them again and again without knowing what they mean and not taught to know and to care.

Paganery Today.
 During the year Vienna, Quebec and Philadelphia have celebrated great events by exhibitions of historical paganism on a mammoth scale. Next exhibition is to be the stage of an year London will see the stage of an month, and on this side of the water the discovery of Lake Champlain, in 1920, will be celebrated by a display arranged by the same artist that designed the spectacle at Quebec and is signed at work on the details of the London pageant.

The spectacle at Philadelphia during Founders' week was at once attractive to look at and instructive and impressive. This is the idea of the modern pageant. It must be impressive and to that end must be dramatic. Only those episodes which are capable of picturesque treatment and will stimulate the eye to a story intertwined with the march of events vital to the life of the city or the country where the pageantry is held can be depended upon not to confound and weary the spectator. 100 to 300 years were presented in the events reviewed. We do not worship ancestors except as builders for posterity. When their counterparts present that side of history, they will see it all the program, pleased as well as reverent.

The recent death of General Eppa Hunton left but one survivor of the famous electoral commission which decided the disputed presidential election of 1876, Senator Edmunds. All but two or three of the fifteen who served on that commission were then elder statesmen, few being younger than fifty, and the mortality among them has not been excessive.
