C. H. Faithan & Son of 211 Wabash avenue, Chicago, who have located here and Woodstock, have on display in Burkhardt's jewelry store in this town high grade pianos, including Straus, Groves and Knabe and leading combination players at $150 and up. They have sold over 175 instruments in this vicinity and will give list of references. If you are in the market for a piano it is to your advantage to examine their line. They will also receive orders for tuning.

There will be union meetings of the Barrington township Sunday school association next Sunday afternoon and evening, at the Zion church. Chicago speakers will be present and also in the afternoon there will be a talk by Mrs. H. K. Brockway, Miss Lydia Delahof, Joseph Freeman, Herman Gleske and George Stiefenhofer, each representing churches of the village. Frank Plaggy, president, is in charge.

Could Not Afford It. Improvident Citizen—Would you like to subscribe a dollar or two to help out a poor old washerwoman in bed with rheumatism and the house full of hungry children?

Provident Citizen—Sorry, old man, but I can't afford it. Will you come along with me to some lively show at the theater where we can forget these sordid miseries and a nice little supper after?—New York Press.

A Curious Trial. The friends of Kirby Mateson church in Yorkville, England, mention a curious trial which took place in the church in the seventeenth century. A woman was tried for stealing a skull out of the churchyard. Her defense was that she took the skull to put under the pillow of a sleepless friend as a charm to make her sleep. She was reprimanded and ordered to put the skull back.

Honor For Jefferson. "Was, for Jefferson," said Mrs. Brasley of Jefferson City, "I reckon that fellow that writ out the Declaration of Independence deserved the honor."

"You mean the honor of being assigned to write it?"

"Not at all. I mean the honor of 'B' named for our town. They called him Jefferson, you know."—Philadelphia Press.

A Relic of the French "Terror." Recently the latibud in which Marat was surprised and assassinated by Charlotte Corday at the height of the reign of terror in France was offered for sale by a Paris dealer in curios. This relic was once bought for a museum, and there it could well have remained, for it is a memento of one of the thrilling episodes of the revolution—a woman braving the power of the conspirators and smiling on the scaffold when giving her life for the taking of the life of the chief terrorist.

The mania for owning relics which mean nothing in particular to the owners is often unaccountable. Somebody paid $100 for a lock of Napoleon's hair, and another body gave $200 for a smaller lock from the head of Lord Nelson. The purchasers in these cases may have acted from sentiment. Surely it was sentiment on the part of an admirer of Charley's that costed $100 for a presumably slender purse for a lock of his hair. The part that mere association can play in the curio business is shown in the case of Sterne, the author, whose wig brought $100, although it didn't contain a hair from his own head and probably gipped originally at $10 on a "charge account" which the wigmaker never could collect. John Bunyan's hair was sold not long ago for $1200 and will never go begging at that price, but one would suppose that the French would pay $200,000 for the chance of making kindling wood of the desk of Mirabeau, which is more than he has preserved in any museum of history. This price the French government gave for the piece of furniture which once held the secrets of the Austrian diplomat who overmatched Napoleon and then tortured his son, the Prince of Reichenbach. The memento of the monster Maria's snail and of Metternich's triumph should change places.

False Economy Decried. Applying the current criticism of our methods of using our natural resources to steel production, the Iron Trade Review says:

The work of the conservation association should be constructive and not destructive, and it would be quite well if the work were inaugurated with a frank recognition that it is a positive fact that the great mass of the problems to be worked out are not problems which are new to the United States; that there are ready-made answers to so many of them that it will pay better to bend the mind to the solution of the problems which have already been adopted abroad than to endeavor to solve them anew in the United States; that for some years to come it will probably be better all the while to follow as closely as possible the examples which have been set by other countries.

Admitting that our methods of steel consumption are wasteful, this paper says, "The use of better steel and better forms of steel should be encouraged." Over three tons of crude material are used to make one ton of steel rails. The weight of waste could be reduced and that of the finished product increased, but the steel would be inferior. But it was "having at" the pig-iron and losing at the bargain.

Reduce the volume of waste in the process of manufacture and turn out inferior products.

A Real Old New Yorker.

There died recently a member of Washington Irving who had known New York by heart for more than three generations. He was there as a child and schoolboy and as an octogenarian gentleman of leisure and during all the years between, in his boyhood Mr. Irving lived near the present city hall and Manhattan entrance to the Brooklyn bridge.

Marvelous changes have taken place in New York during this one life, which began when it was an overgrown town and ended in a metropolis of 4,000,000 inhabitants. Mr. Irving saw plays in the Park theater, opposite the historic Astor House, and attended Columbia college, which was only a block or so from his home. The social and intellectual life of the city then centered below "the canal," a locality now identified with Canal street. Needless to say that this octogenarian beheld New York transformed many times and died a stranger to his own city.

The American ballisticians who threw out sand during their 4000 foot plunge at Berlin had sand all right, but they were not a bit particular who stood under when they checked the bags overhead.

Ferdinand the Budeen, self made "czar of Bulgaria," is not one of the opera bouffe type of petty rulers, but an all round man like King Edward of England.

"Impulsiveness" is the new name for an old fact that has become much evil fruit in the shape of "affinities" and other freakish tumbles from the safe and sane path.

It took Castro just as long to get "wiped" as it did Heland to fit out four warships to attend to his case.

Now and then the newspaper "beast" "Barrington" Wall Street" reminds us how history repeats itself.

Cleanliness is one of the things a dainty housewife exacts of meat market. You get it here. Handling roasts at this market is only done in the most cleanly manner possible. This market prides itself on its cleanly methods of handling meat as much as it does on the superiority of its roasts. We have fresh vegetables every day and would like to serve you. .. Gloves and Mittens ..

Just received a large line of sample gloves and mittens, cotton and leather, from a factory that does not employ salesmen. They requested us to make up a stock order and to dispose of the samples instead of returning them, which, if you will come early, will give you a large line to select from and at lower prices than you have been in the habit of paying.
