TAFT'S SERVICE TO LABOR.

Destroyed the old English Law Association that Union Labor is a Conspiracy.
 (From the Emporia (Kan) Gazette.)
 The simple fact is that no man has done more to place union labor on a sound, square, law-abiding, respected footing than William H. Taft by his decisions in labor cases. Both employers and employes have acknowledged the justice of his decisions and learned to abide by them, and today there is not an intelligent worker or fair-minded employer who would seek to abrogate them.

Judge Taft tried union labor from the doubt and uncertainty as to its rights which had before prevented, and gave it a standing which it has never since obtained, and which has proved under his rulings, secure against all attack. The old assumption, derived from England, that workers could be prevented from leaving railway or other employment at their will, was swept away forever by Judge Taft so far as the United States is concerned, and when an attempt was made, years later, to revive the principle, Judge Taft's decision was quoted successfully by the labor side to defeat the plan.

Mr. Taft was and is labor's friend, because he is absolutely just, and would no more permit wrong to be done to the poorest laborer in the land than he would to any one else. And the honest law-abiding workers seek and expect no more than this.

Tom Walker.
 Tom Walker, whose name is so affectionately lined with that of his Statute majesty in the worldwide saying, "The devil and Tom Walker" was a poor old miser, born in Massachusetts about the year 1727. Tom suddenly became very rich and opened a counting house in Boston during the panic which prevailed in the time of Governor Belcher. He grew rich and richer, but one day as he was foreclosing a mortgage with a poor land jobber a black man appeared on horseback and knocked at his office door. Tom went to open it and was never seen again. Of course the good people of Boston immediately noted that he had sold his soul to the devil for wealth.—New York American.
 "Is that you, Frank?" asked Mrs. Tippins in a nervous voice as she noted some one moving about in the next room in the darkness.
 "It is," replied Mr. Tippins.
 "You gave me such a shock. I thought at first there was a man in the house."—Exchange.
