Mohammed's Dove.
Some of the older historians tell us that Mohammed had a dove which he used to feed with wheat out of his ear. When the dove was hungry it used to alight on the prophet's shoulder and thrust its bill into his ear to find its meal. Mohammed, it is said, thus led the Arabs to believe that the bird was a messenger from God with inspired truths for him.—New York American.

Hunting in Sumatra.
In Sumatra anybody may hunt as much as he pleases, the only condition being that a portion of the game must be given to the chief on whose territory it is killed. Elephants, rhinoceroses, tigers, apes, tigers and bears are among the game animals. The Sumatrans themselves have given up killing elephants with lances and knives. They now use firearms.—London Standard.

A Witty Retort.
They were discussing the relative position of various countries in the industrial centers. Germany seemed to have the most votaries, such to the evident displeasure of the Englishman, who wished his own country to carry off the palm. "Italy is turning out the most munitions and has always turned out the most," said the Englishman. "Ach!" exclaimed a German present. "Can you blame dem?"

So Kind!
Latewood—Your brother is such a considerate boy, my dear. Mrs. Latewood (impulsively) Why, yes, my dear. Why, I asked him up to dinner this morning, and he wanted to know if we had a cook, and when I told him you did the cooking with your own sweet hands he absolutely refused to come for fear it would make you extra work.—Kansas City Independent.

Quite Simple.
Police Official—Any clues to that mysterious murder?
Detective—Yes, sir, I've arrested all the living members of the family.
Official—Glorious! What evidence have you?
Detective—When I accused them of the murder some of them turned white and some turned red. Now, all we have to do is to find out which color means guilt.

St. George and the Dragon.
According to Perry, St. George, the son of Lord Albert of Coventry, after fighting against the Saracens went to Sicily, city of Libya, where there was a stagnant lake infested by a monster dragon "whose hide no spear could pierce." Every day a virgin was sacrificed to it, and at length it came to the lot of the king's daughter to become the victim. She was tied to the dragon and left to be devoured when St. George came up and vowed to take her case in hand. On came the dragon, when the saint, thrusting his lance into its mouth, killed it at once.

Maltese Muskrat.
One of the most objectionable of the pests that invade houses in Malta is the muskrat. Everything he touches is impregnated with the odor from which he derives his name. In a wide field he is more than a pest but a vermin. In a larger he is more destructive than a dozen cats. From pure wantonness he talus and renders unsteady everything within his reach. His odor is so powerful and at the same time so penetrating that dozens of bottles of beer may be ruined by his merely running over the bottles. The muskrat is a speaking little animal who commits his enormities at night, and he adds insult to injury by disturbing the repose of the victims of his depredations.—London Standard.

Wind Pressure.
A wind traveling at the rate of three miles an hour presses with a weight of about three-quarters of an ounce upon every square foot of surface which stands in its way. A wind of eighteen miles an hour gives a pressure of one pound and a quarter to each square foot, a wind of thirty miles an hour gives a pressure of six pounds on the square foot, a rate of fifty miles an hour thirteen pounds, a storm of seventy-five miles twenty-eight pounds and a hurricane of ninety miles forty pounds on the square foot.

Hindoo Gods.
Gods are as thick in India as the leaves on the trees—in the minds of the masses of the people. Hindu mythology is so elaborate to the great trinity of Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva—Brahma the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver and Shiva the Destroyer. Of these gods Brahma is looked upon as being the highest, but Vishnu is the most beloved god, while Shiva, on account of the but he is supposed to be capable of and inclined to, is the one who holds the largest share of the people's attention.

The Bridge of Lions.
A bridge comparatively little known was constructed long ago in China in the reign of the Emperor King Leang. It is situated near to Sangang and the Yellow sea and measures not less than eight miles and a half. The Bridge of Lions, as it is called, is supported by 300 mimes arches, and its foundation is twenty-one meters under water. On each pile of this wonderful bridge is a marble statue of a lion three times larger than life size. The coup d'oeil of these 300 enormous lions, each one supporting an arch, is stupendous in its magnificence.

Master and Master.
Formerly the term "master" was a markedly respectful form of address. Now in the form "mistress" it has become common property, while "mistress" itself has become confined to boys. However, the fall of "master" has not been so great as is that of the French "monsieur." At one time even a saint was spoken of as "Monsieur St. Jean." Under the early Valois the king was "monsieur" in public documents, and later it became the title of the king's mother, the Dowager. "M." is merely on a level with "M."

So your son is now a soldier, boy, Uncle Ben?" "Yes, ah; he's done good of malicious corpse, sah."—Baltimore American.

Meat on the Brain
As Well as the Expense of It.

The average householder is face to face with the important question of meat prices for the coming winter. He finds he cannot get decent meat at fair prices except when he deals here. We simply won't handle inferior qualities, because we know that they are really the dearest and most wasteful in the end. Here you get the choicest beef, lamb, mutton, veal, pork and poultry.
