Original "Blue Streak," or Sharp-Shinned Hawk

The sharp-shinned hawk, the most abundant of what the ornithologists call "the sharp-shinned hawk" or "blue darter," can give a bird hunter a good deal of trouble. It is a very common feathered insectivore, and is not for the purpose of killing world speed records.

The More Game Birds conducted an organization of nationally known business men and sportsmen, the sharp-shinned hawk as the best bird life manager. In the book, "More Game Birds by Controlling Their Natural Enemies," the author declares: "The sharp-shinned hawk is second in its destructive habits only to the Cooper hawk and goshawk as a game bird predator and should be controlled at all times."

Aesop, Author of Fables, Was Born About 619, B. C.

Aesop, the reputed author of the collection of fables, is said to have been born about 619 B. C. and the Greek island of Samos is the place most commonly given as that of his birth. notes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"He was a slave and is supposed to have been given his freedom because of his unusual talents." On visiting his freedom he visited Greece, and Lydia. At the Court of Croesus, King of Lydia, he won great favor and, was employed on several missions of importance. One of these at Delphi he was shown over a precipice by the priest, who became enraged at his jests.

Such is the story of Aesop. There is no record as to when and under what circumstances he composed his fables. Some authorities hold that he was not a historical personage at all—no more than a name that somehow attached itself to an ancient collection of tales. Greek writers, however, had a definite idea of him, representing him as a Cypriot. At least one statue survives.

It is certain that some of the fables are much older than the period in which Aesop lived; but that may mean only that he was a plagiarist. The fable of the Lion and the Mouse, and the Dispute of the Stomach and the Members are two stories which have been found before 619 B. C. Others have been traced to Chinese and Indian sources.

Shetland Islands Numerous

The Shetland islands, north of Scotland, comprise a group of about 90 islands, only a third of which are inhabited. The islands are generally devoid of trees, but a small agricultural development occurs on the inhabited islands. The principal industry of the islands, however, is fishing. The coast lines are dotted with harbors and inlets. In fact, so broken is the coast line, that part of any of the islands is more than three miles distant from the sea. They were formerly a possession of Scandinavia, but changed ownership in 1468, when they came under Scotch domination.

Temperature in Siberia Reaches Lowest Recorded

Verkhovansk, Siberia, holds the world's blue ribbon for frigid winter weather, compared with any other place where temperatures are regularly measured, according to Literary Digest.

Vladimir Zenkov, in "The Road to Oblivion," says of some effects of the severe cold:

"You take a glass of water and dash it high into the air, the liquid will come down in the form of ringing crystals of ice. Spittle will freeze before reaching the ground. All live things seek deep shelter during the winter. Partridges dig themselves far into the snow and stay there. There have been cases of their falling like stones while in flight, freezing to death in the air."

Marmots hide in underground holes where they hibernate, assuming the shape of a little claylike ball. The fox becomes so hard the ax rebounds from it. Live wood becomes petrified and when one chops it, sparks fly as if from flint."

Injured Wrist in Game

Henry Brandt, senior in the Barrington high school, sustained a badly injured right wrist in the football game with the McHenry high school team Saturday afternoon. The injured wrist was placed in a cast and preliminary indications are that the Brochose player will be out of the game most of the season.
