THE WORLD'S HONORS

The world has always honored highly the people who do things the world values. To carry out this thought, the schools publish lists of honor students. Such recognition is useful, since these students are frequently retiring young folks, who are scarcely appreciated outside their own neighborhoods.

The colleges distribute honors in the form of learned degrees. The statesman who has solved national problems, is made a doctor of laws. The master of social science is made a doctor of philosophy. The world does not pay much attention to these learned degrees. Yet in millions of humble homes, the working hours are shorter and the children better fed, because of the labors of these men of research.

Meanwhile the pitcher who can twist a baseball so the baffled batter can't locate it with his swishing stick, may be better known in his home city than the constructive statesman or the patient man of research. The eccentric path of that baseball does not do much to make daily life more livable. But the results thrill the bleachers to frenzies of excitement.

The laborious scholar sits alone in his silent study, and communes with his books. But the football player who can worm his way amid the tackling opponents is carried off the field on the shoulders of his comrades, while the stadium echoes with the thunder of the rosters.

The highest honors ought to go to the people who teach us to think, because it is through thought that the world escapes its troubles. We honor the people who can throw a baseball faster than the competing athletes. But we fail to pay equal honors to the men of science and philanthropy, who remove the fetters that hold men down to earth, and thus enable humanity to make use of its wings.—Enterprise, Norwood, Ohio.
