CLOSING IN ON AGRICULTURE

Where are those expanded foreign markets and safely protected domestic markets that the New Deal promised the American farmer?

What has become of the promises held out by Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt to American agriculture in his Topeka, Ka., speech, when he was running for the presidency? And again in his Sioux City, Iowa, speech? And again in his Seattle, Wash., speech?

Under the policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt, as carried out by the agricultural adjustment administration, plus the reciprocal tariff agreements, the American farmer has all but lost his foreign markets, and is beginning to lose his domestic markets by virtue of increasing agricultural imports.

The report of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce for the month of September, this year, gives comparative figures (under general headings) for the first nine months of this year and the first nine months of last year. These figures show a decline in the value of exports of animals and edible animal products in the first nine months of this year, as compared to the first nine months of 1934, of $17,691,000. The decline in the quantity of exports of meat products for the same period amounted to 70,191,000 lbs.; lard, 290,620,000 lbs.; wheat, 16,573,900 bus.; wheat flour, 596,000 bbls.; unmanufactured tobacco, 73,831,000 lbs.; raw cotton, 590,412,000 lbs.

The value of exports of vegetable food products and preparations for the same period declined $11,306,000.

That shows the speed with which American agriculture is losing its foreign markets under the New Deal.

Now for the record of how it is losing its domestic markets. Imports for the first nine months this year, as compared with the first nine months of 1934, show an increase of 41,835,000 lbs. of meat products; 21,304,000 lbs. of butter; and 26,650,000 lbs. of fish.

Did it ever occur to you that the best method of climbing higher on life's ladder of success is to remain ON THE LEVEL?

Advertising is what draws away the trade from the small village. Advertising will also keep it at home.
