A NEW BATH FOR BABY? ... NO!

It's An Electric Washer With A New Principle

Although the inventor does state that this washer was made to wash clothes, not babies, it is still possible to place a baby in the tub, fill the washer with water, set the machine in full operation and then let the youngster splash around in it to his heart's content. It would be all fun, no discomfort and above all else, safe, as there are no moving parts in the washing compartment. The illustration merely explains how easy this new washing principle is on clothes.

No Agitation!

The necessity for an agitator is done away with, just as the self-starter did away with cranking cars long and super alone do the work. An aluminum pump (which does not come in contact with the clothes in any way) maintains a continuous circulation of hot soapy water at high velocity.

The moving water pushes through the fabric, taking the dirt with it to the bottom of the tub. The clothes are alternately opened up and squeezed together in the turbulent soapy water—not too much, not too little, just enough—to insure thorough wetting.

While the action is the most gentle known, the clothes come out absolutely clean—soft and fluffy—practically like new material. Wear is reduced to the very minimum.
